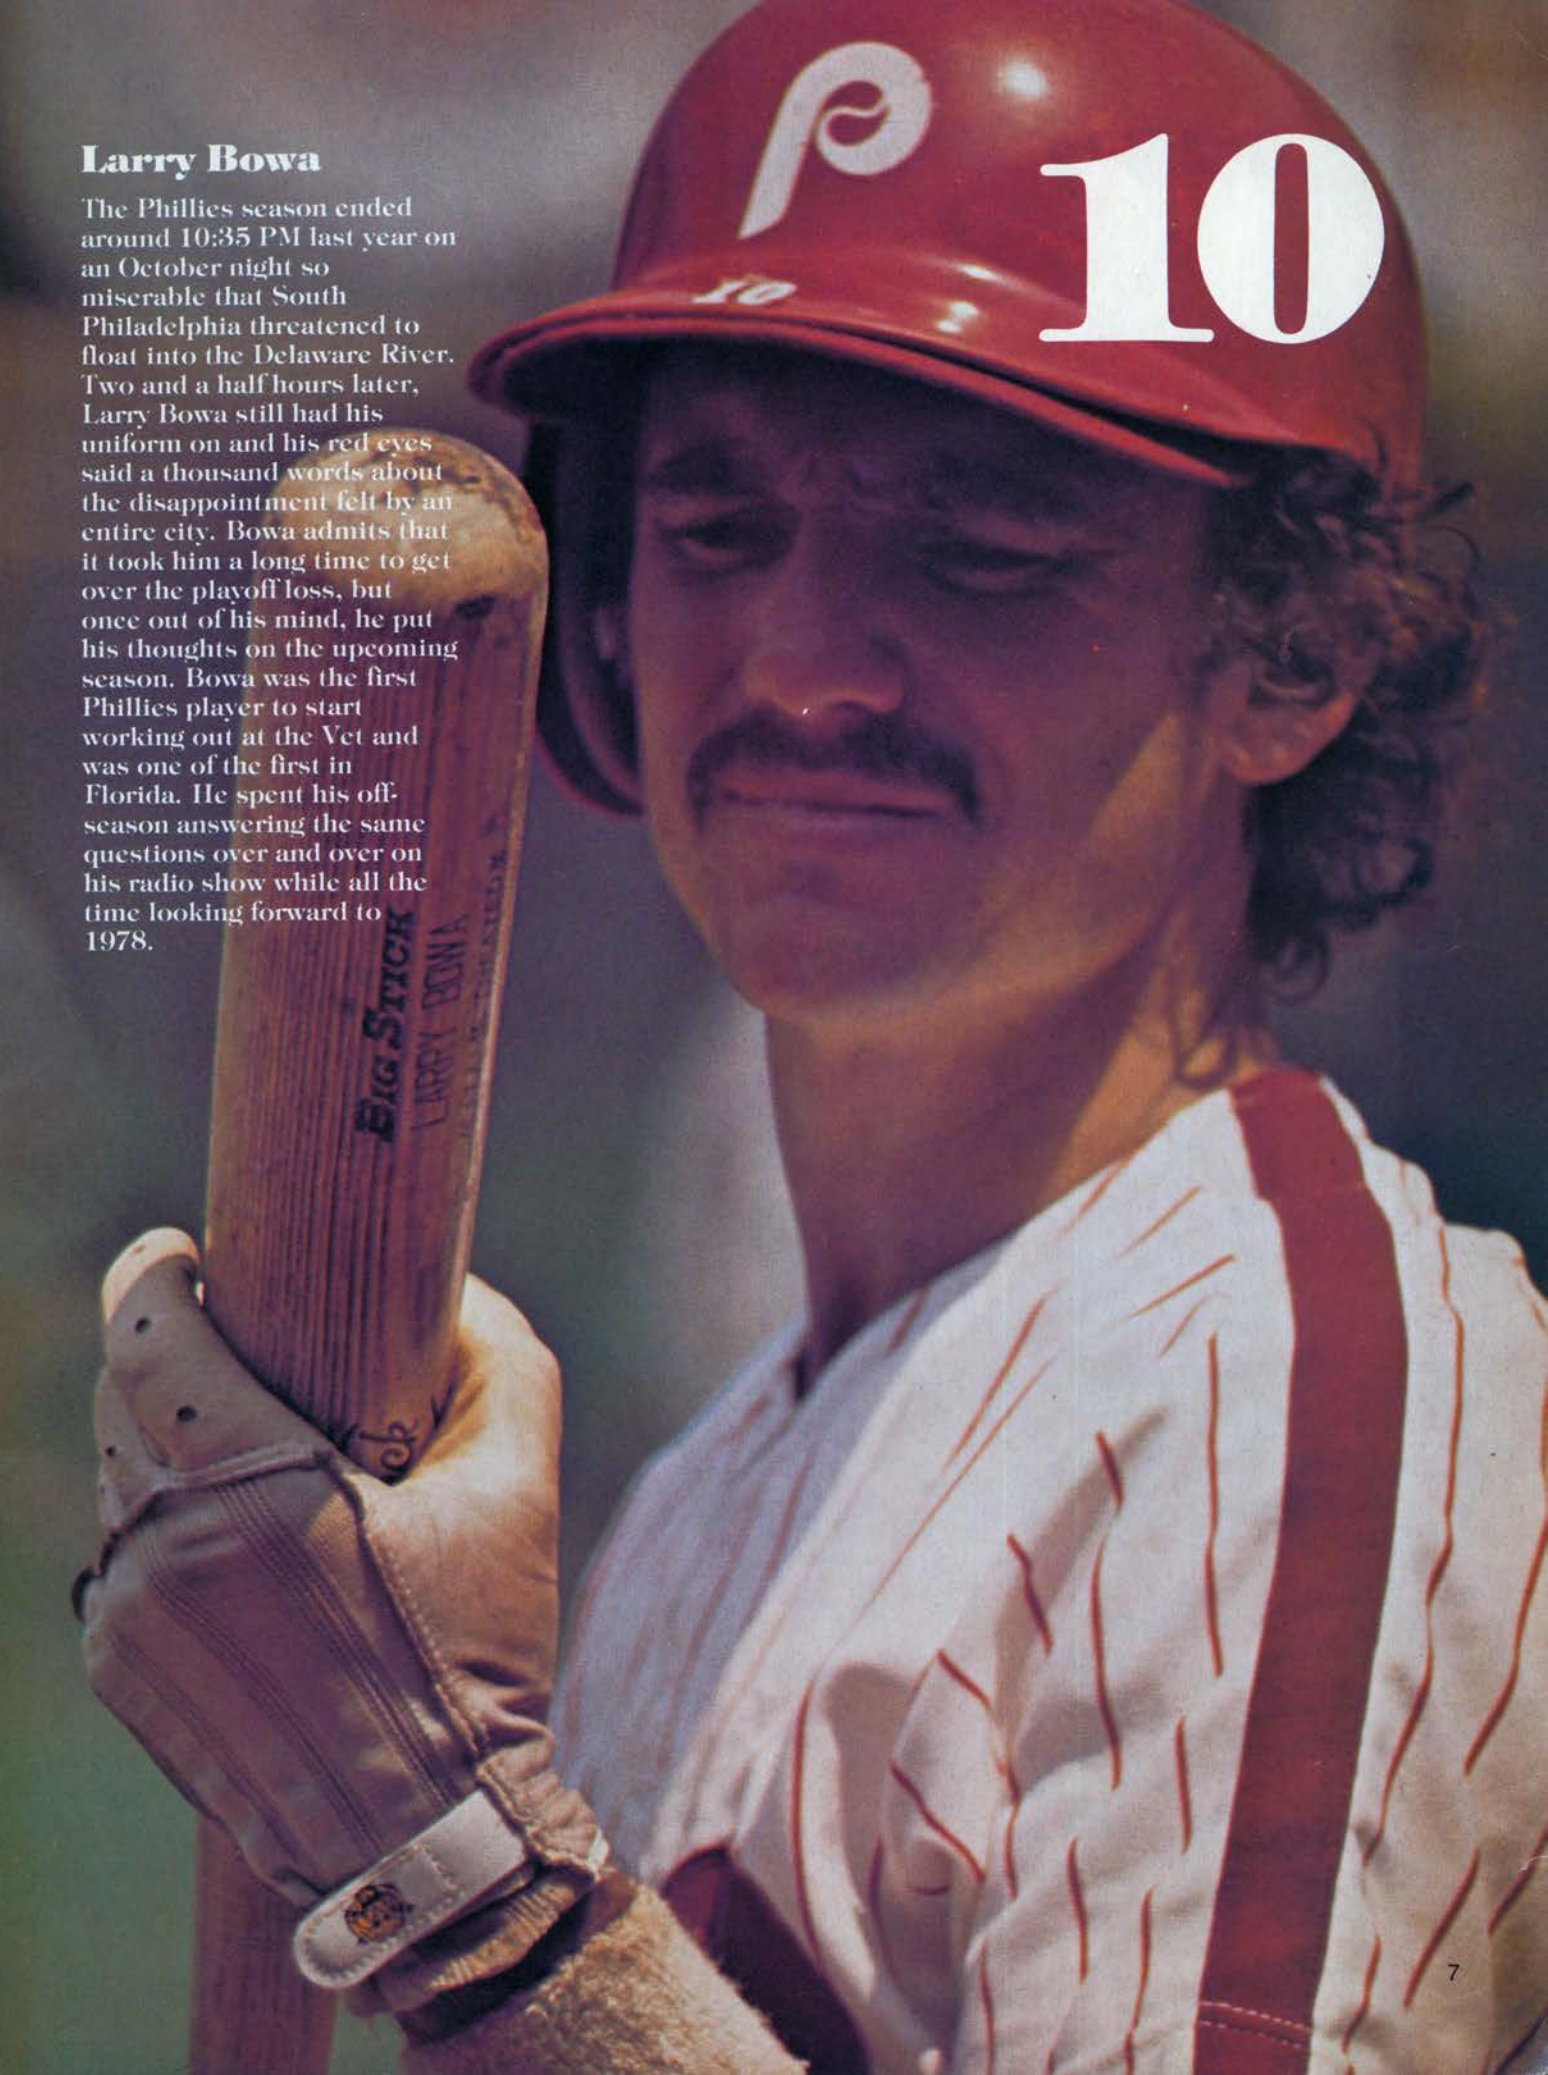
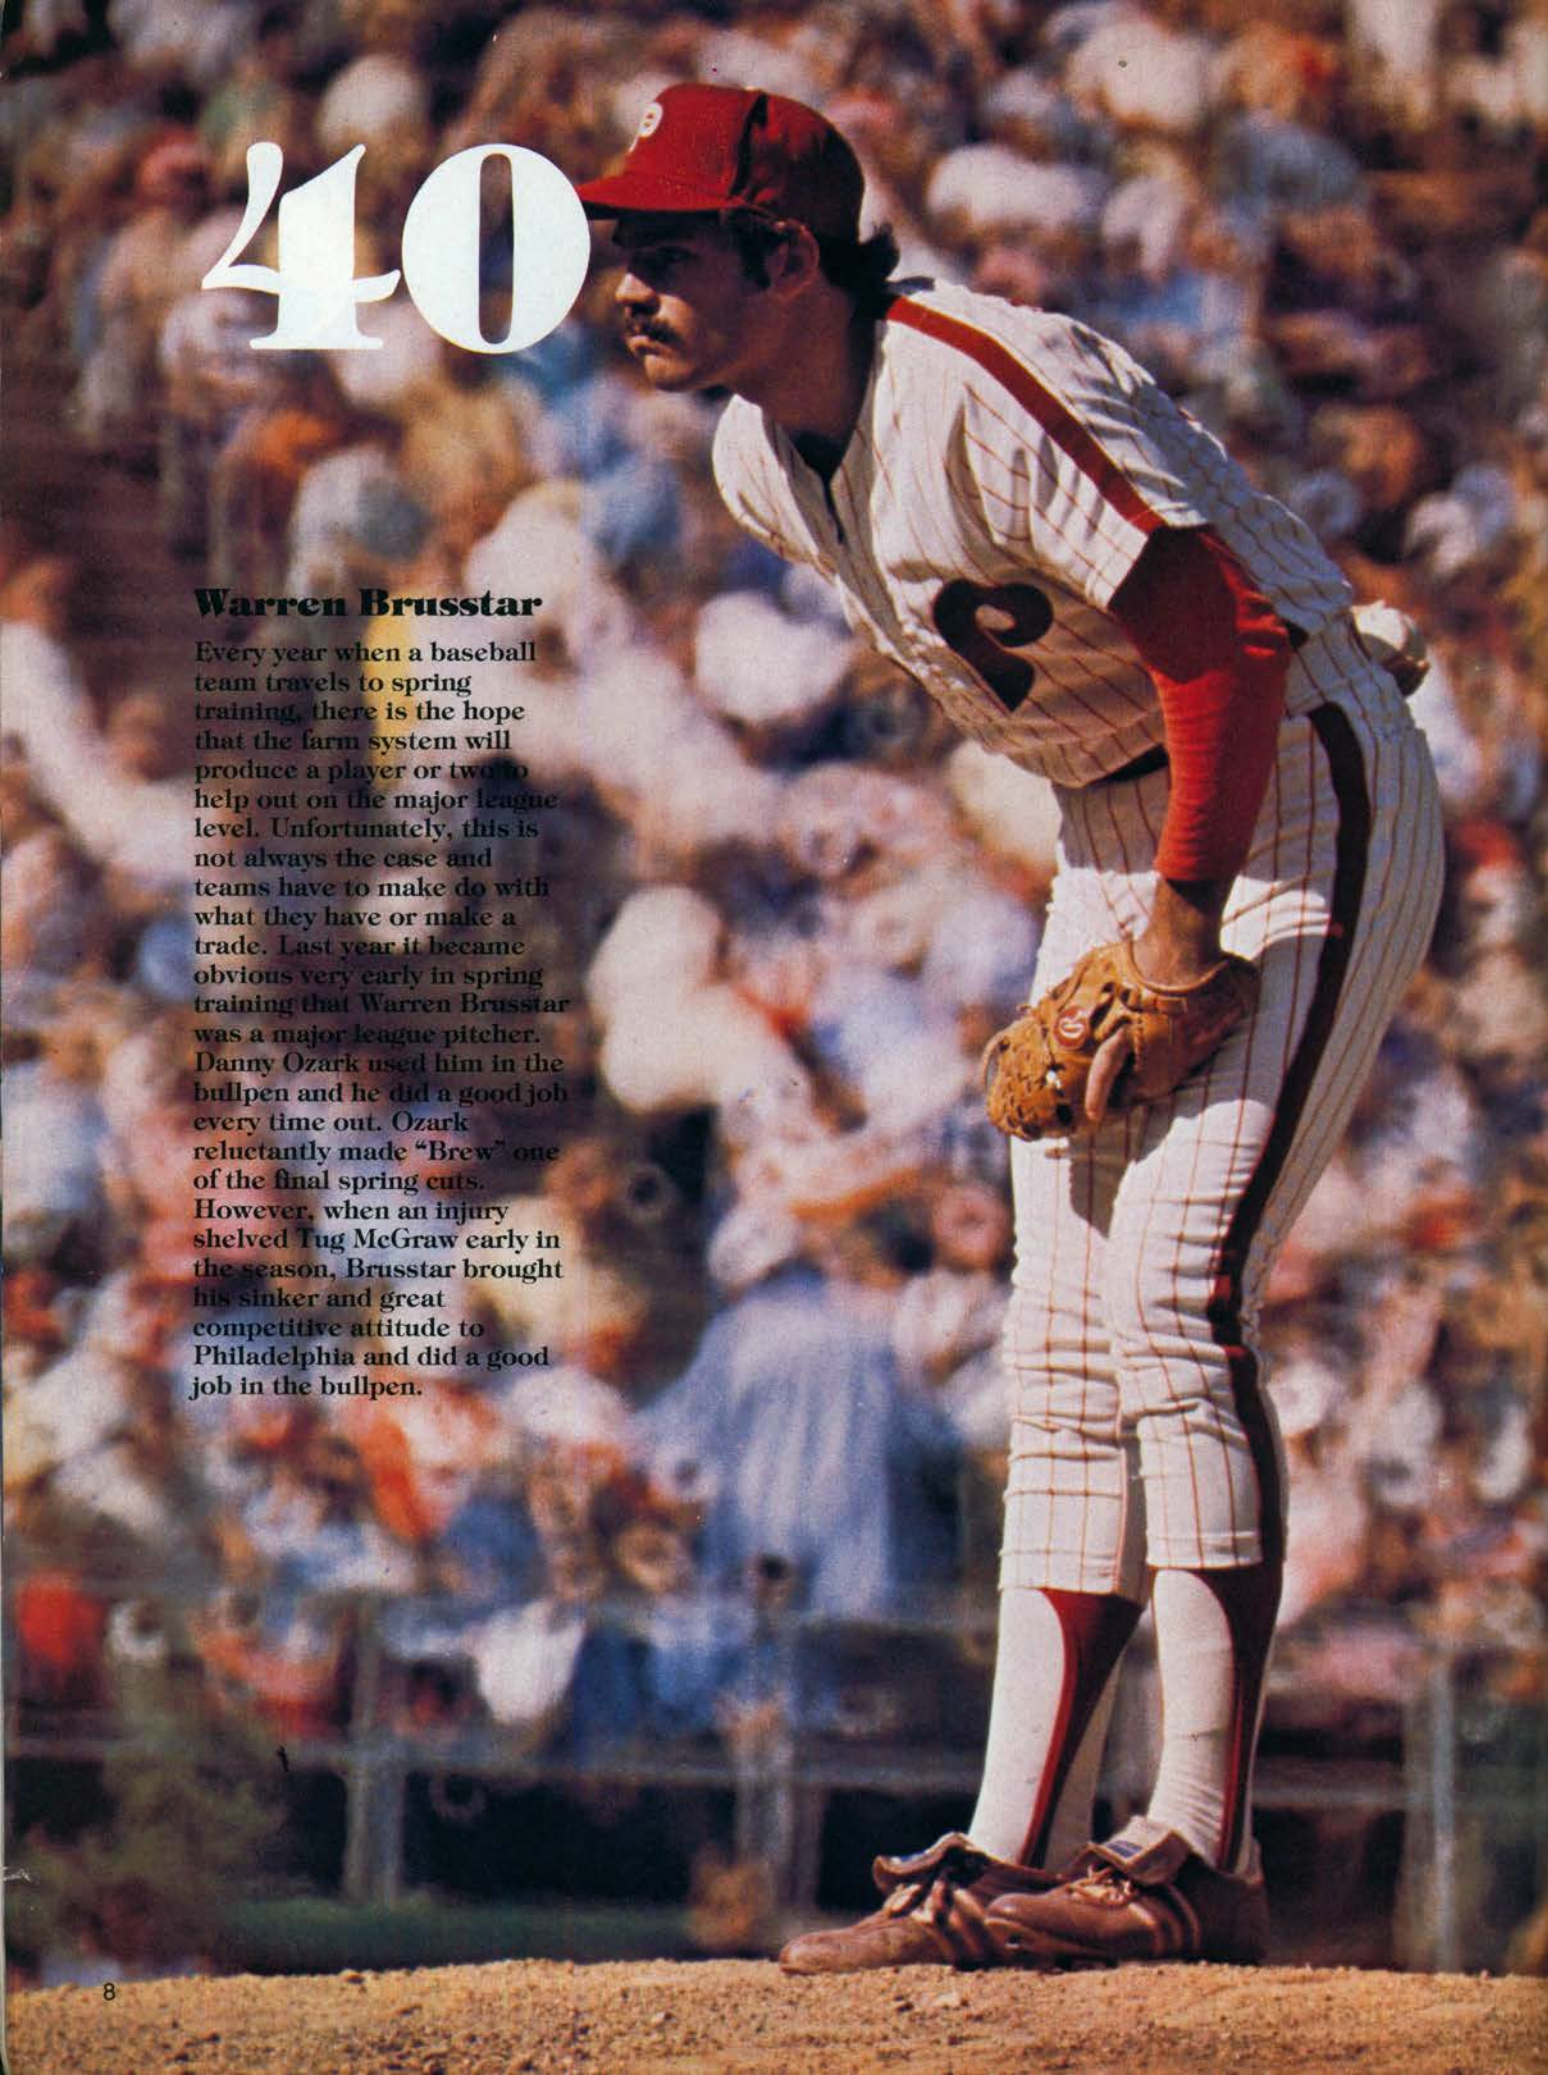
Bob Boone

His teammates like to refer to Bob Boone as a "gamer." Just put his name on the lineup card and the handsome Californian will strap on the equipment and do the job. Boone has played with plenty of pain the last few seasons, but last year was the toughest as he struggled the entire season with a right knee that felt like a toothache. Following the season, Bob had the knee operated on and spent the winter rehabilitating his leg to the point where he feels that it has never been stronger. Boone is coming off his best offensive year as he hit .284 with a career high 11 HR and 66 RBI.



Larry Bowa

The Phillies season ended around 10:35 PM last year on an October night so miserable that South Philadelphia threatened to float into the Delaware River. Two and a half hours later, Larry Bowa still had his uniform on and his red eyes said a thousand words about the disappointment felt by an entire city. Bowa admits that it took him a long time to get over the playoff loss, but once out of his mind, he put his thoughts on the upcoming season. Bowa was the first Phillies player to start working out at the Vet and was one of the first in Florida. He spent his off-season answering the same questions over and over on his radio show while all the time looking forward to 1978.



40

Warren Brusstar

Every year when a baseball team travels to spring training, there is the hope that the farm system will produce a player or two to help out on the major league level. Unfortunately, this is not always the case and teams have to make do with what they have or make a trade. Last year it became obvious very early in spring training that Warren Brusstar was a major league pitcher. Danny Ozark used him in the bullpen and he did a good job every time out. Ozark reluctantly made "Brew" one of the final spring cuts. However, when an injury shelved Tug McGraw early in the season, Brusstar brought his sinker and great competitive attitude to Philadelphia and did a good job in the bullpen.

Jose Cardenal

Wrigley Field is one of baseball's prettiest and noisiest ballparks. Normally filled with young people, the fans of Chicago love their Cubbies, win or lose. In recent years, the loudest reception normally was saved for a slightly built outfielder named Jose Cardenal who rewarded his fans with some tremendous clutch performances. Cardenal didn't play as much as he wanted in 1977 and asked out of Chicago. One of the teams he wanted to play for was the Phillies and Jose got his wish last October. The Phillies are happy to have a player of Cardenal's ability on their ballclub and it shouldn't take long for Philadelphia fans to warm to the exciting [illegible] outfielder.

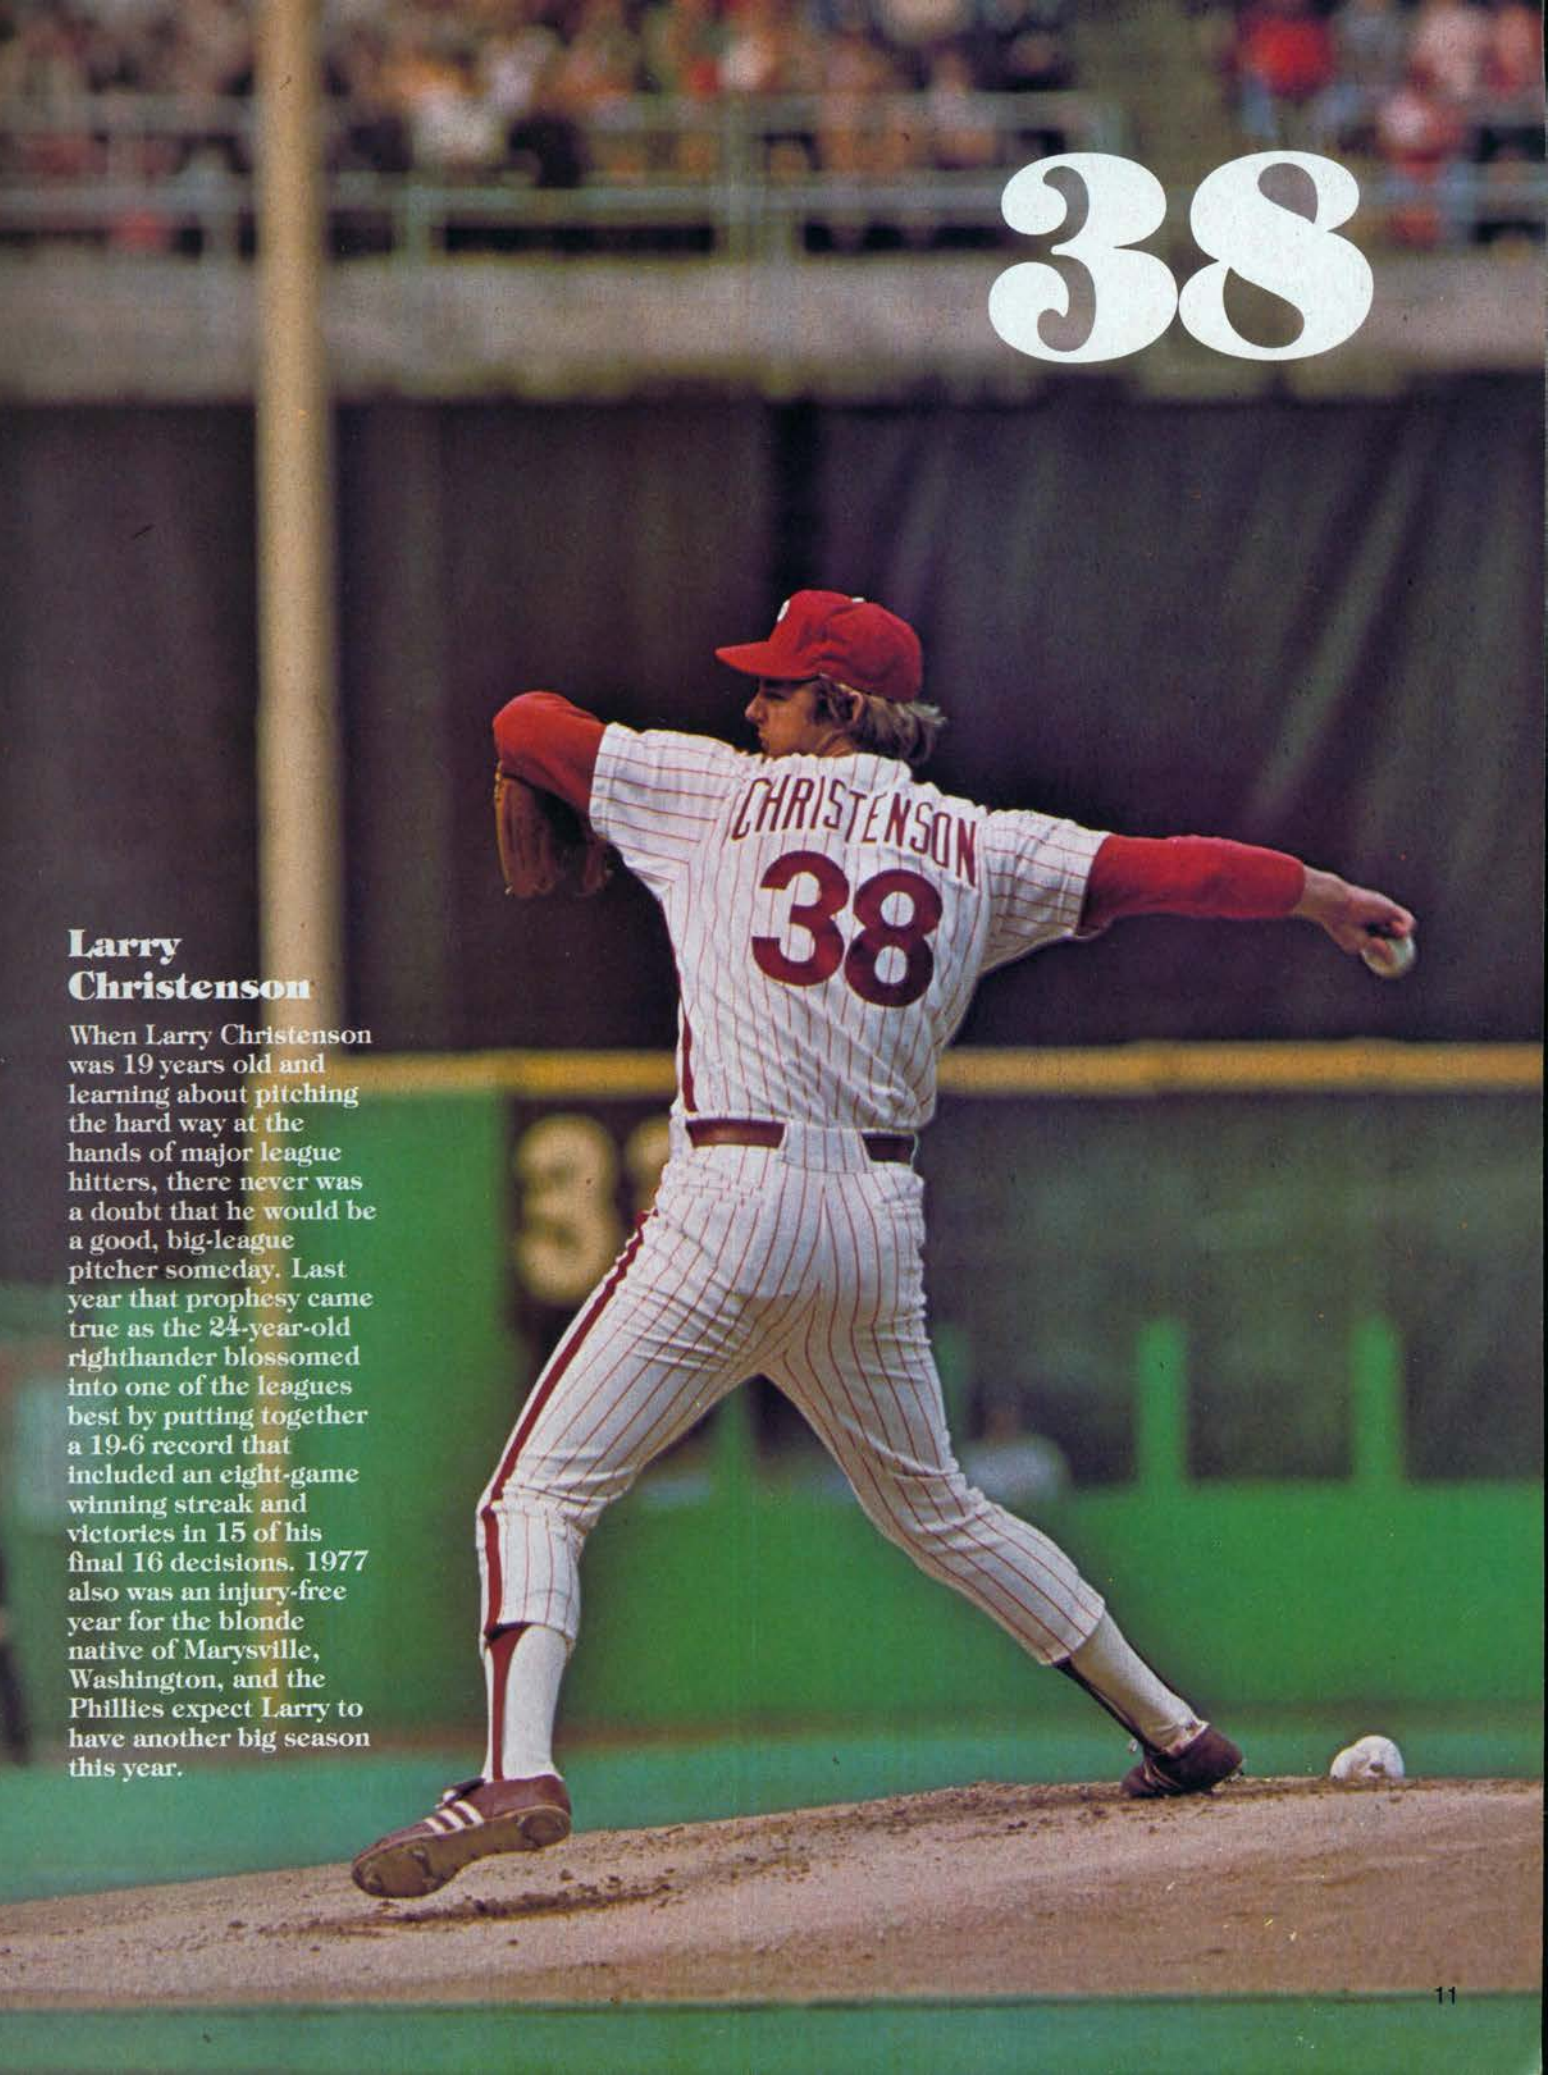
Steve Carlton

All championship caliber teams have one thing in common. They all have that one big workhorse on their pitching staff who can be counted on to pitch every fourth or fifth day and win a lot of ball games. In big lefthander Steve Carlton, the Phillies have one of baseball's best workhorses, a man who has pitched over 250 innings for eight straight seasons, and has been a 20-game winner four times in his career, three times with the Phillies. Last year, "Lefty" picked up his second Cy Young Award as he led the Phillies to their second straight National League Eastern Division Championship with a 23-10 record that included a 17-3 home record and a 16-game winning streak at Veterans Stadium.

38



Larry Christenson

When Larry Christenson was 19 years old and learning about pitching the hard way at the hands of major league hitters, there never was a doubt that he would be a good, big-league pitcher someday. Last year that prophesy came true as the 24-year-old righthander blossomed into one of the leagues best by putting together a 19-6 record that included an eight-game winning streak and victories in 15 of his final 16 decisions. 1977 also was an injury-free year for the blonde native of Marysville, Washington, and the Phillies expect Larry to have another big season this year.

Barry Foote

Sometimes you can learn a lot about the makeup of a player by the way he goes about his life off the field. Such is the case with catcher Barry Foote who left the warmer climate of his native North Carolina this past January to spend a month in a Philadelphia hotel. The reason was to work daily with coach Billy DeMars in the Phillies underground batting cage at Veterans Stadium. Both Foote and DeMars were pleased with the progress they made and Foote was one of the early arrivals in spring training this year as he sought to prove that he is capable of playing regularly in the major leagues.

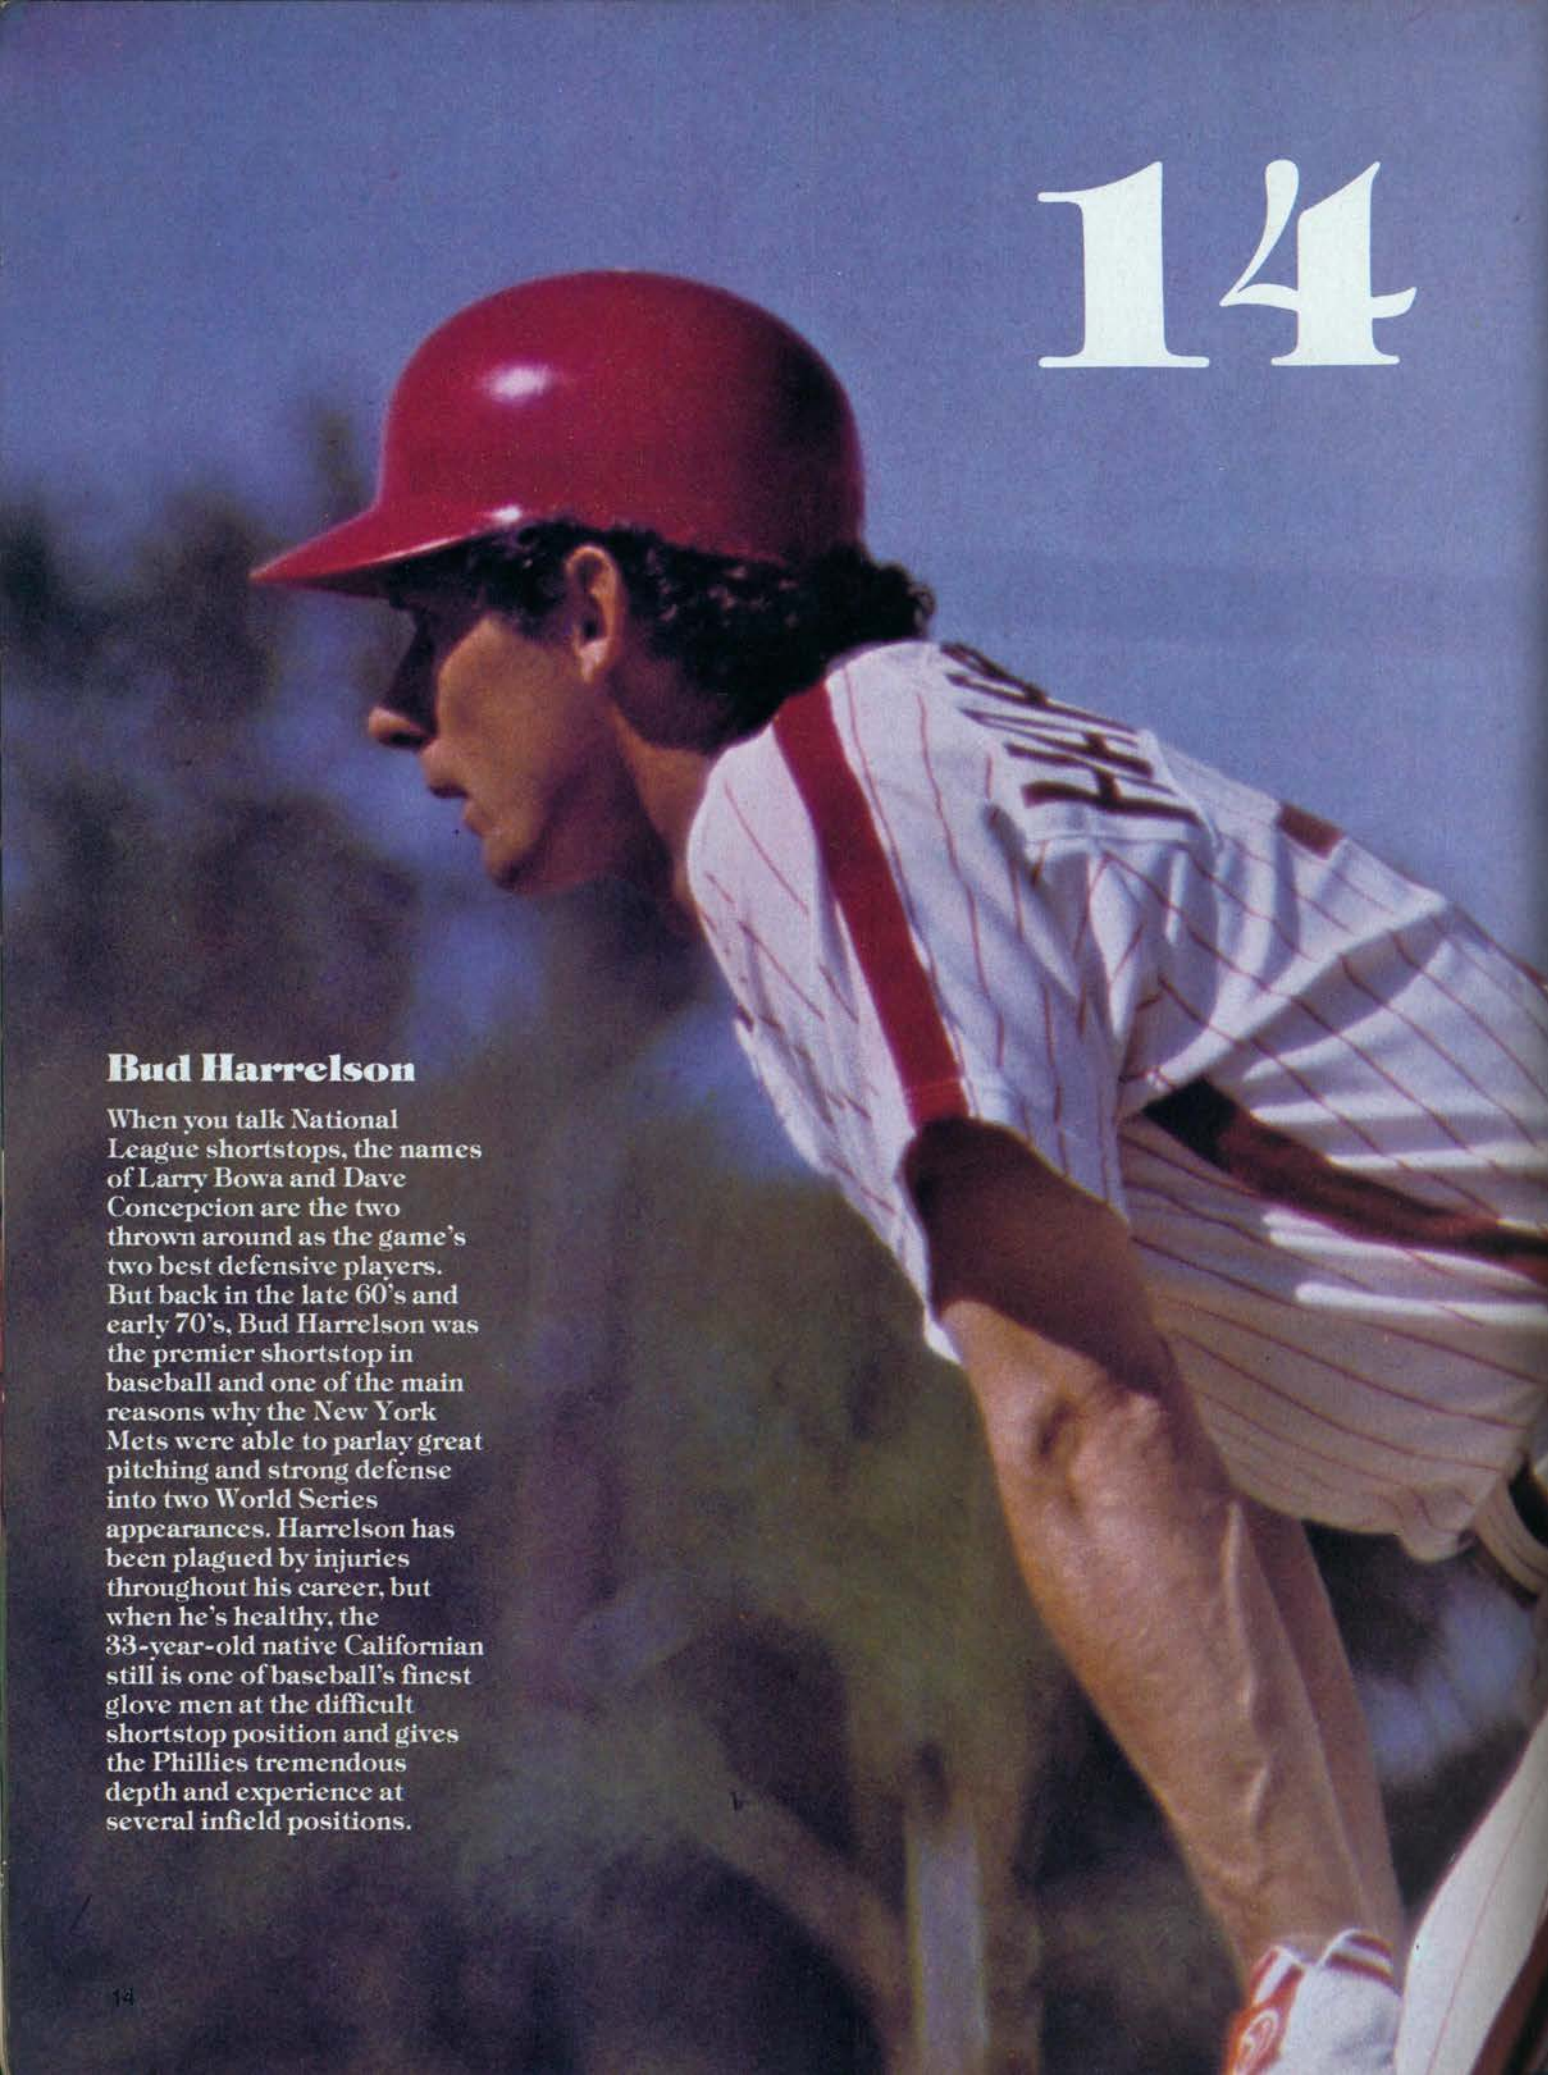
Gene Garber

Paul Owens likes to say that sometimes the deal you make that seems the most insignificant can turn out to be one of your best. Such was the case in July, 1974, when the Phillies purchased the contract of Elizabethtown, Pa.'s Gene Garber from Kansas City. Since that time, the side-winding righthander has become one of baseball's best relief pitchers picking up 49 saves in his four seasons in a Philadelphia uniform. Garber has developed one of the best change-ups in baseball and has won the award for the past two seasons as the Phillies Relief Man of the Year as sponsored by Rolaids.



14

Bud Harrelson

When you talk National League shortstops, the names of Larry Bowa and Dave Concepcion are the two thrown around as the game's two best defensive players. But back in the late 60's and early 70's, Bud Harrelson was the premier shortstop in baseball and one of the main reasons why the New York Mets were able to parlay great pitching and strong defense into two World Series appearances. Harrelson has been plagued by injuries throughout his career, but when he's healthy, the 33-year-old native Californian still is one of baseball's finest glove men at the difficult shortstop position and gives the Phillies tremendous depth and experience at several infield positions.

Richie Hebner

Following the 1976 season, the Phillies found themselves with a job opening at first base. Paul Owens looked over the people available from other teams, then decided to make a strong bid for Richie Hebner who was playing out his option with the Pirates. Hebner had been a third baseman all of his big league career, but Owens decided that he liked his hands and especially wanted Hebner's strong bat in the Phillies lineup. Richie did not disappoint the Phillies as he fought a couple injuries and hit a solid .285 with 18 home runs and played well at first base.

15

Davey Johnson

Ever hear the story about the guy who had a guaranteed offer for a lot of money but decided to give it up for something less profitable but more rewarding mentally. Well, it might sound unreal but that's just what happened last year when Davey Johnson contacted the Phillies and said he would like to sign with the Phils instead of returning to Japan where he had played for two years. The former American League Gold Glove infielder with Baltimore and the guy who had slammed 43 HR for the Atlanta Braves in 1973 got no guarantee from the Phillies except a good shot at making the club which he did in spring training. He was a valuable addition to the 1978 Phillies playing several infield positions and hitting .321.

Jay Johnstone

Jay Johnstone spent the 1978 season hearing that he wasn't going to play very much and that his days in Philadelphia were numbered. True he didn't get into as many games or collect as many at bats as previous seasons, but J.J. still managed to drive in 59 runs and hit 15 HR. One of the most popular players in Philadelphia in recent years, Jay also showed that he could play first base as he filled in when Richie Hebner was hurt. As flaky as ever Johnstone spent the off season moving into a new home in Southern California and thinking about his favorite subject in life, hitting a baseball.

Dick Ruthin

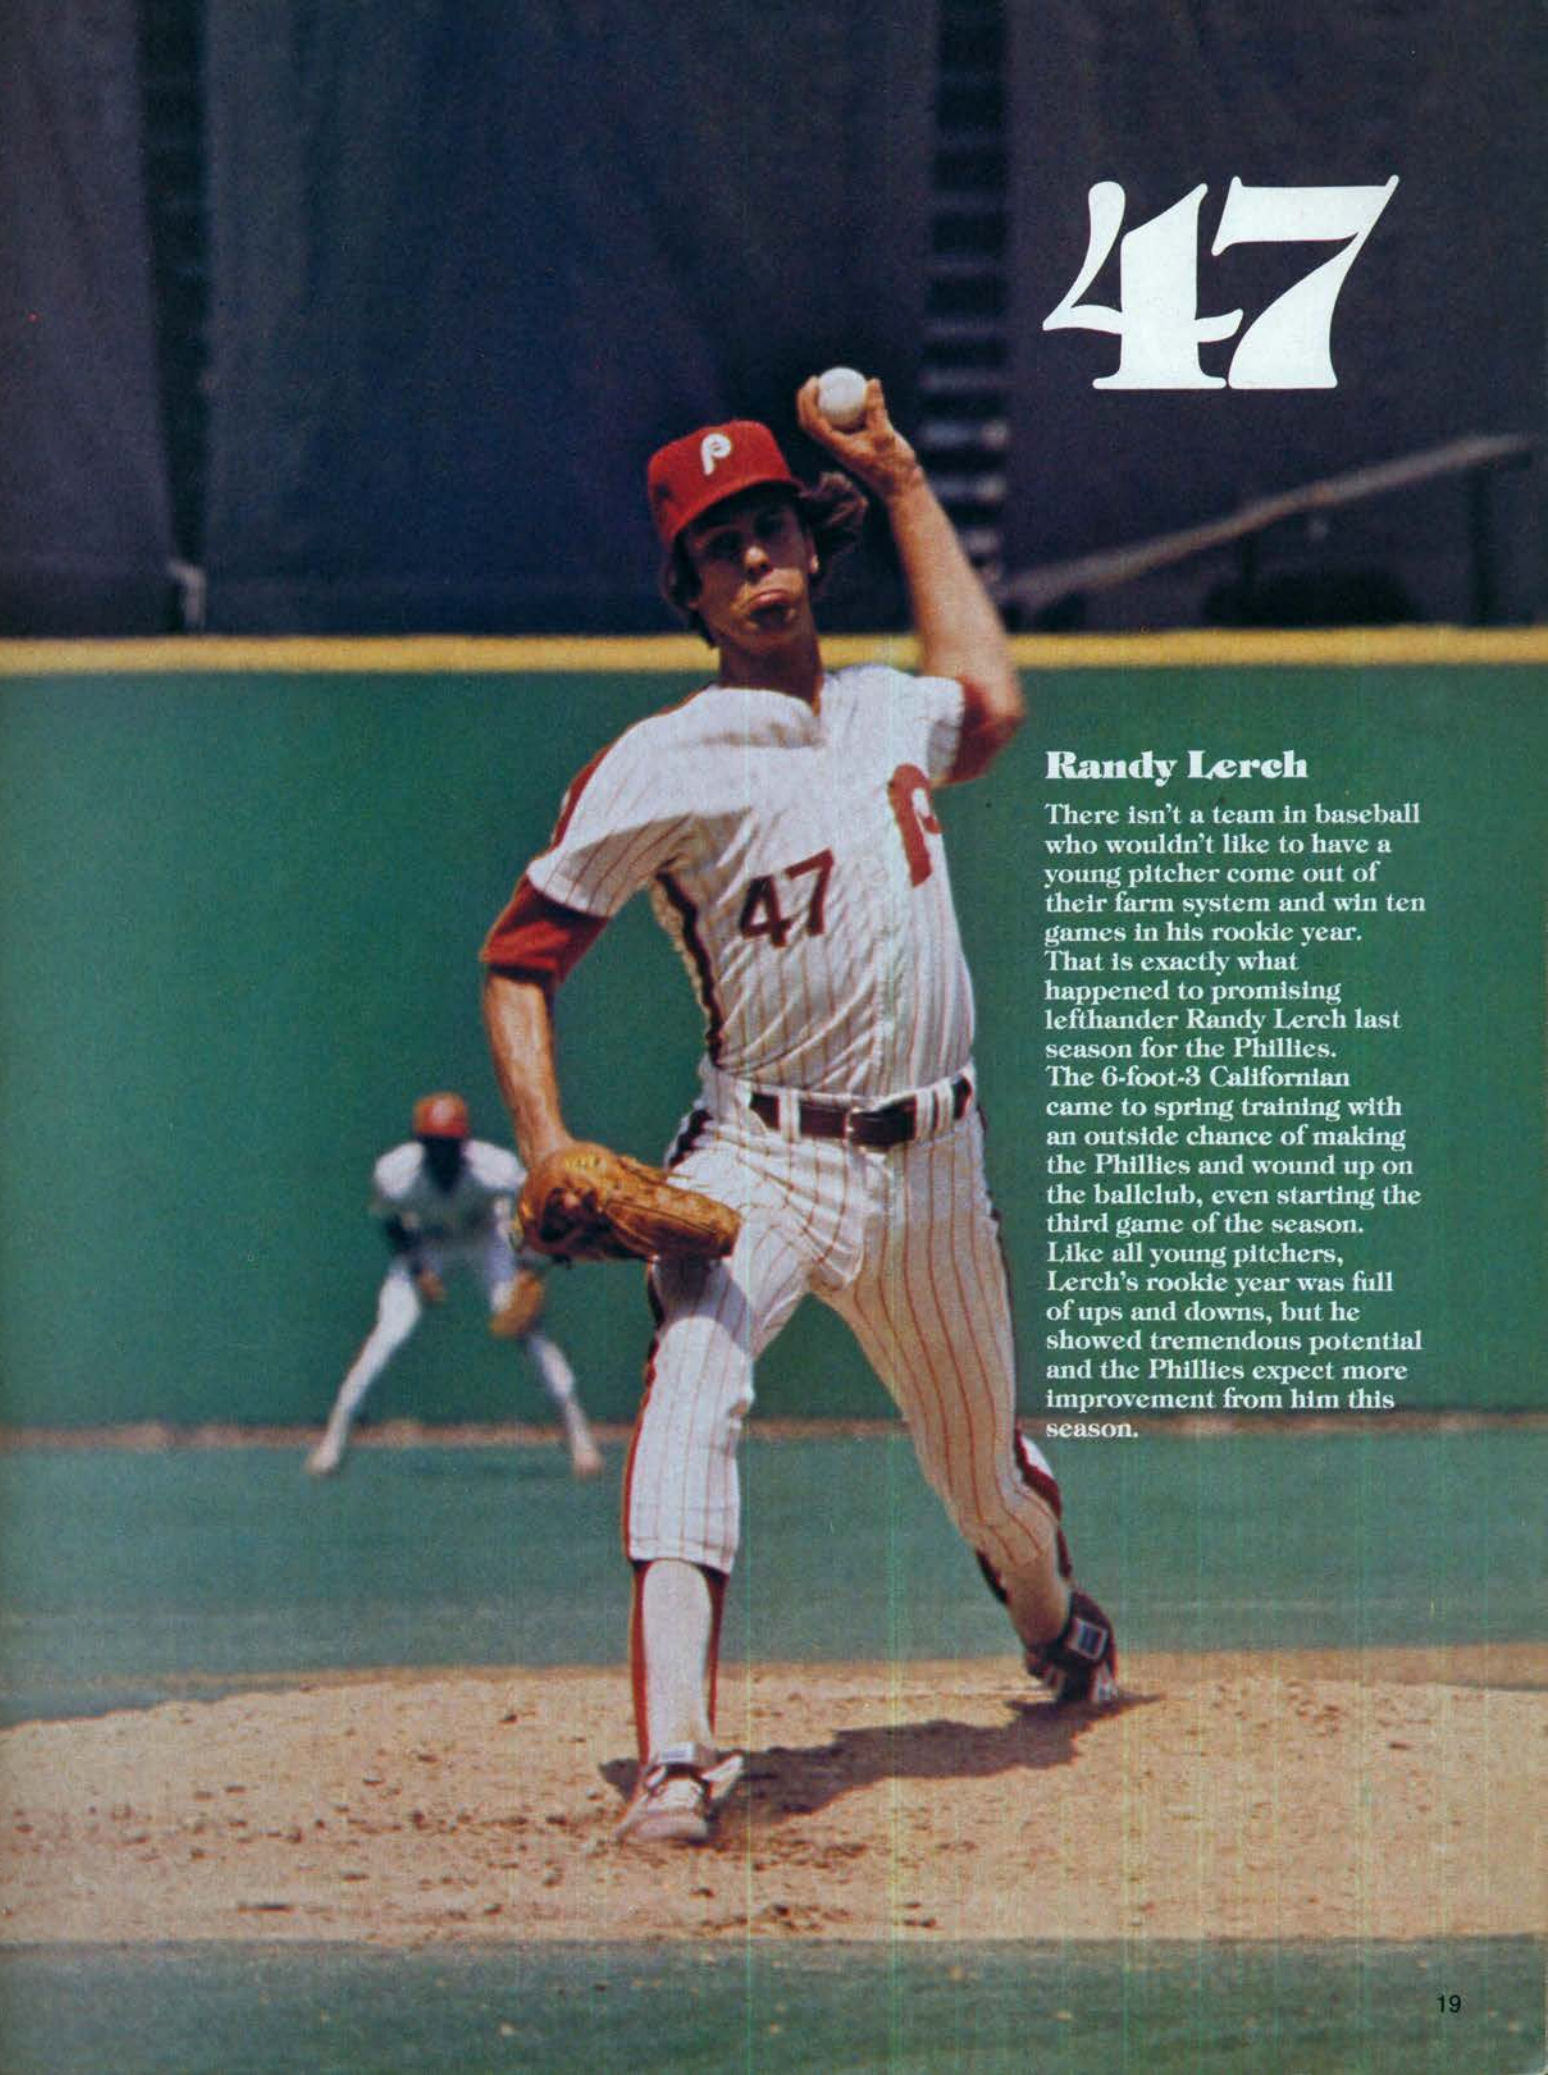
Jim Kaat

When Jim Kaat decides to call it quits after his long and very successful career of pitching baseballs, he will rank with one of the great pitchers of all time. Much the same way that he goes about his job, Kaat has compiled tremendous statistics that rank him high on the all-time lists in several categories. With 253 career victories, he presently is baseball's winningest active pitcher. He has been a 20-game winner three times, his best year being 1966 when he was 25-13 with the American League champion Minnesota Twins.



47

Randy Lerch

There isn't a team in baseball who wouldn't like to have a young pitcher come out of their farm system and win ten games in his rookie year. That is exactly what happened to promising lefthander Randy Lerch last season for the Phillies. The 6-foot-3 Californian came to spring training with an outside chance of making the Phillies and wound up on the ballclub, even starting the third game of the season. Like all young pitchers, Lerch's rookie year was full of ups and downs, but he showed tremendous potential and the Phillies expect more improvement from him this season.

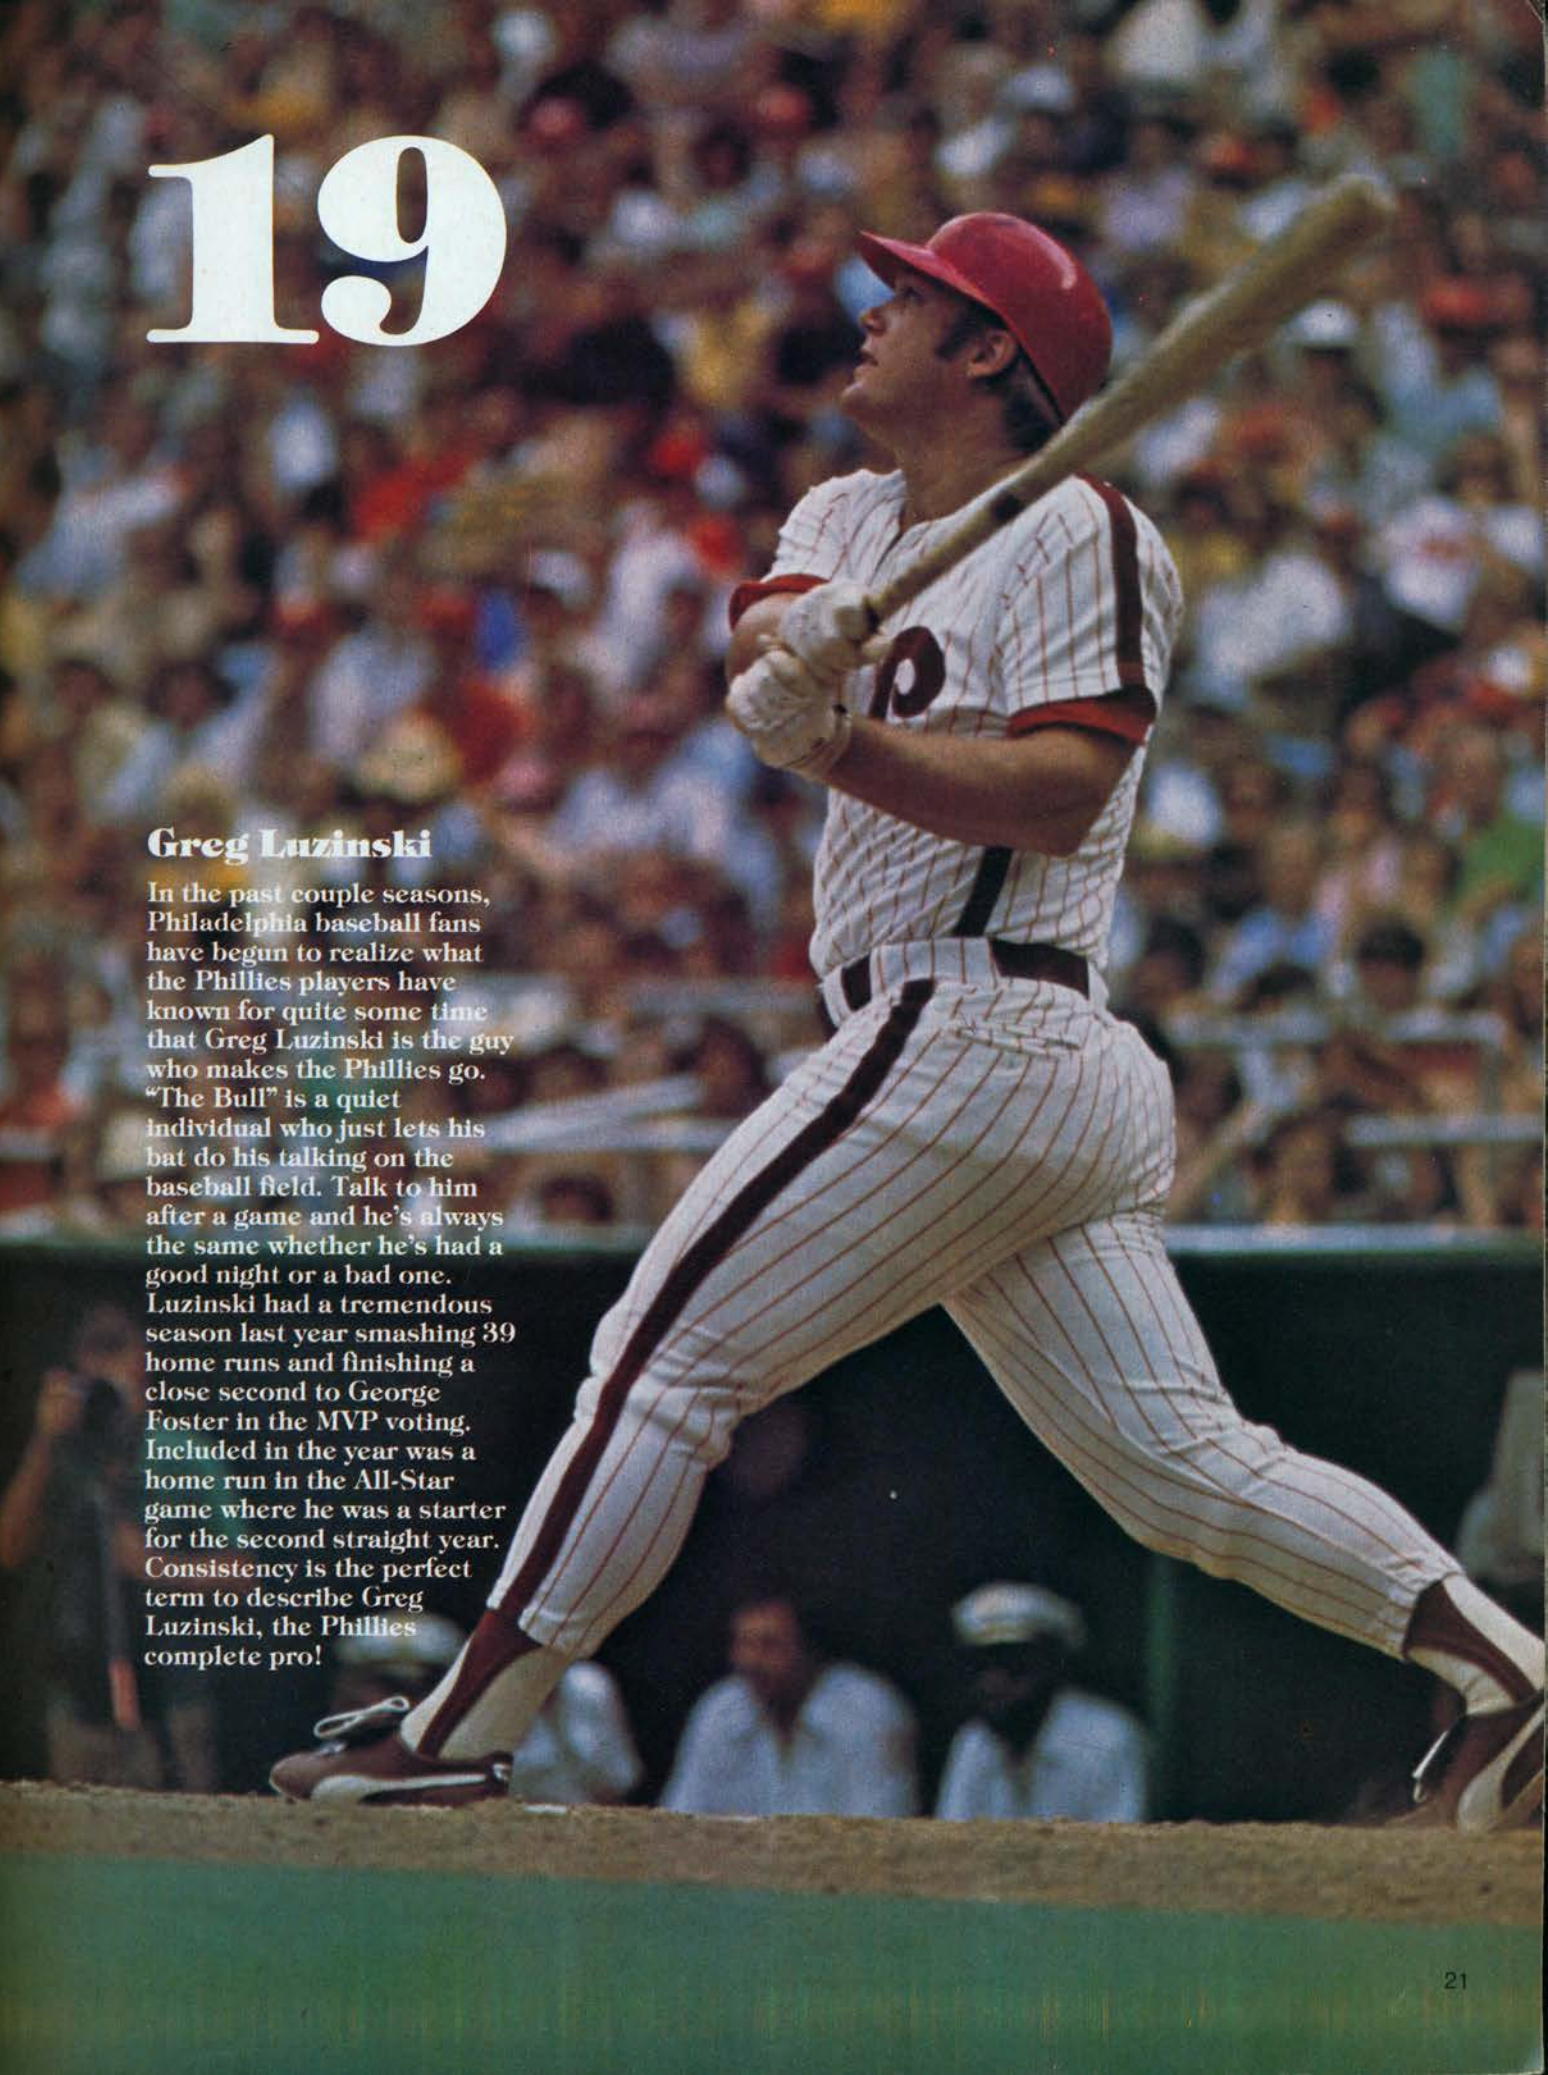
Jim Lonborg

The Phillies were a sputtering baseball team early last season and one of the reasons was the forced inactivity of Jim Lonborg. "Lonnie" had won 18 games for the Phillies in 1976 and the team was counting on him to pitch well again. However, Jim came up with some shoulder miseries in spring training and did not get back in action until late May. Thus it was no coincidence that the Phillies began rolling in July and August about the same time Lonborg was rounding into form and putting together an eight-game winning streak. Some shoulder problems at the end of the year put a damper on his season, but Lonborg reports he is healthy and ready for 1978.

19



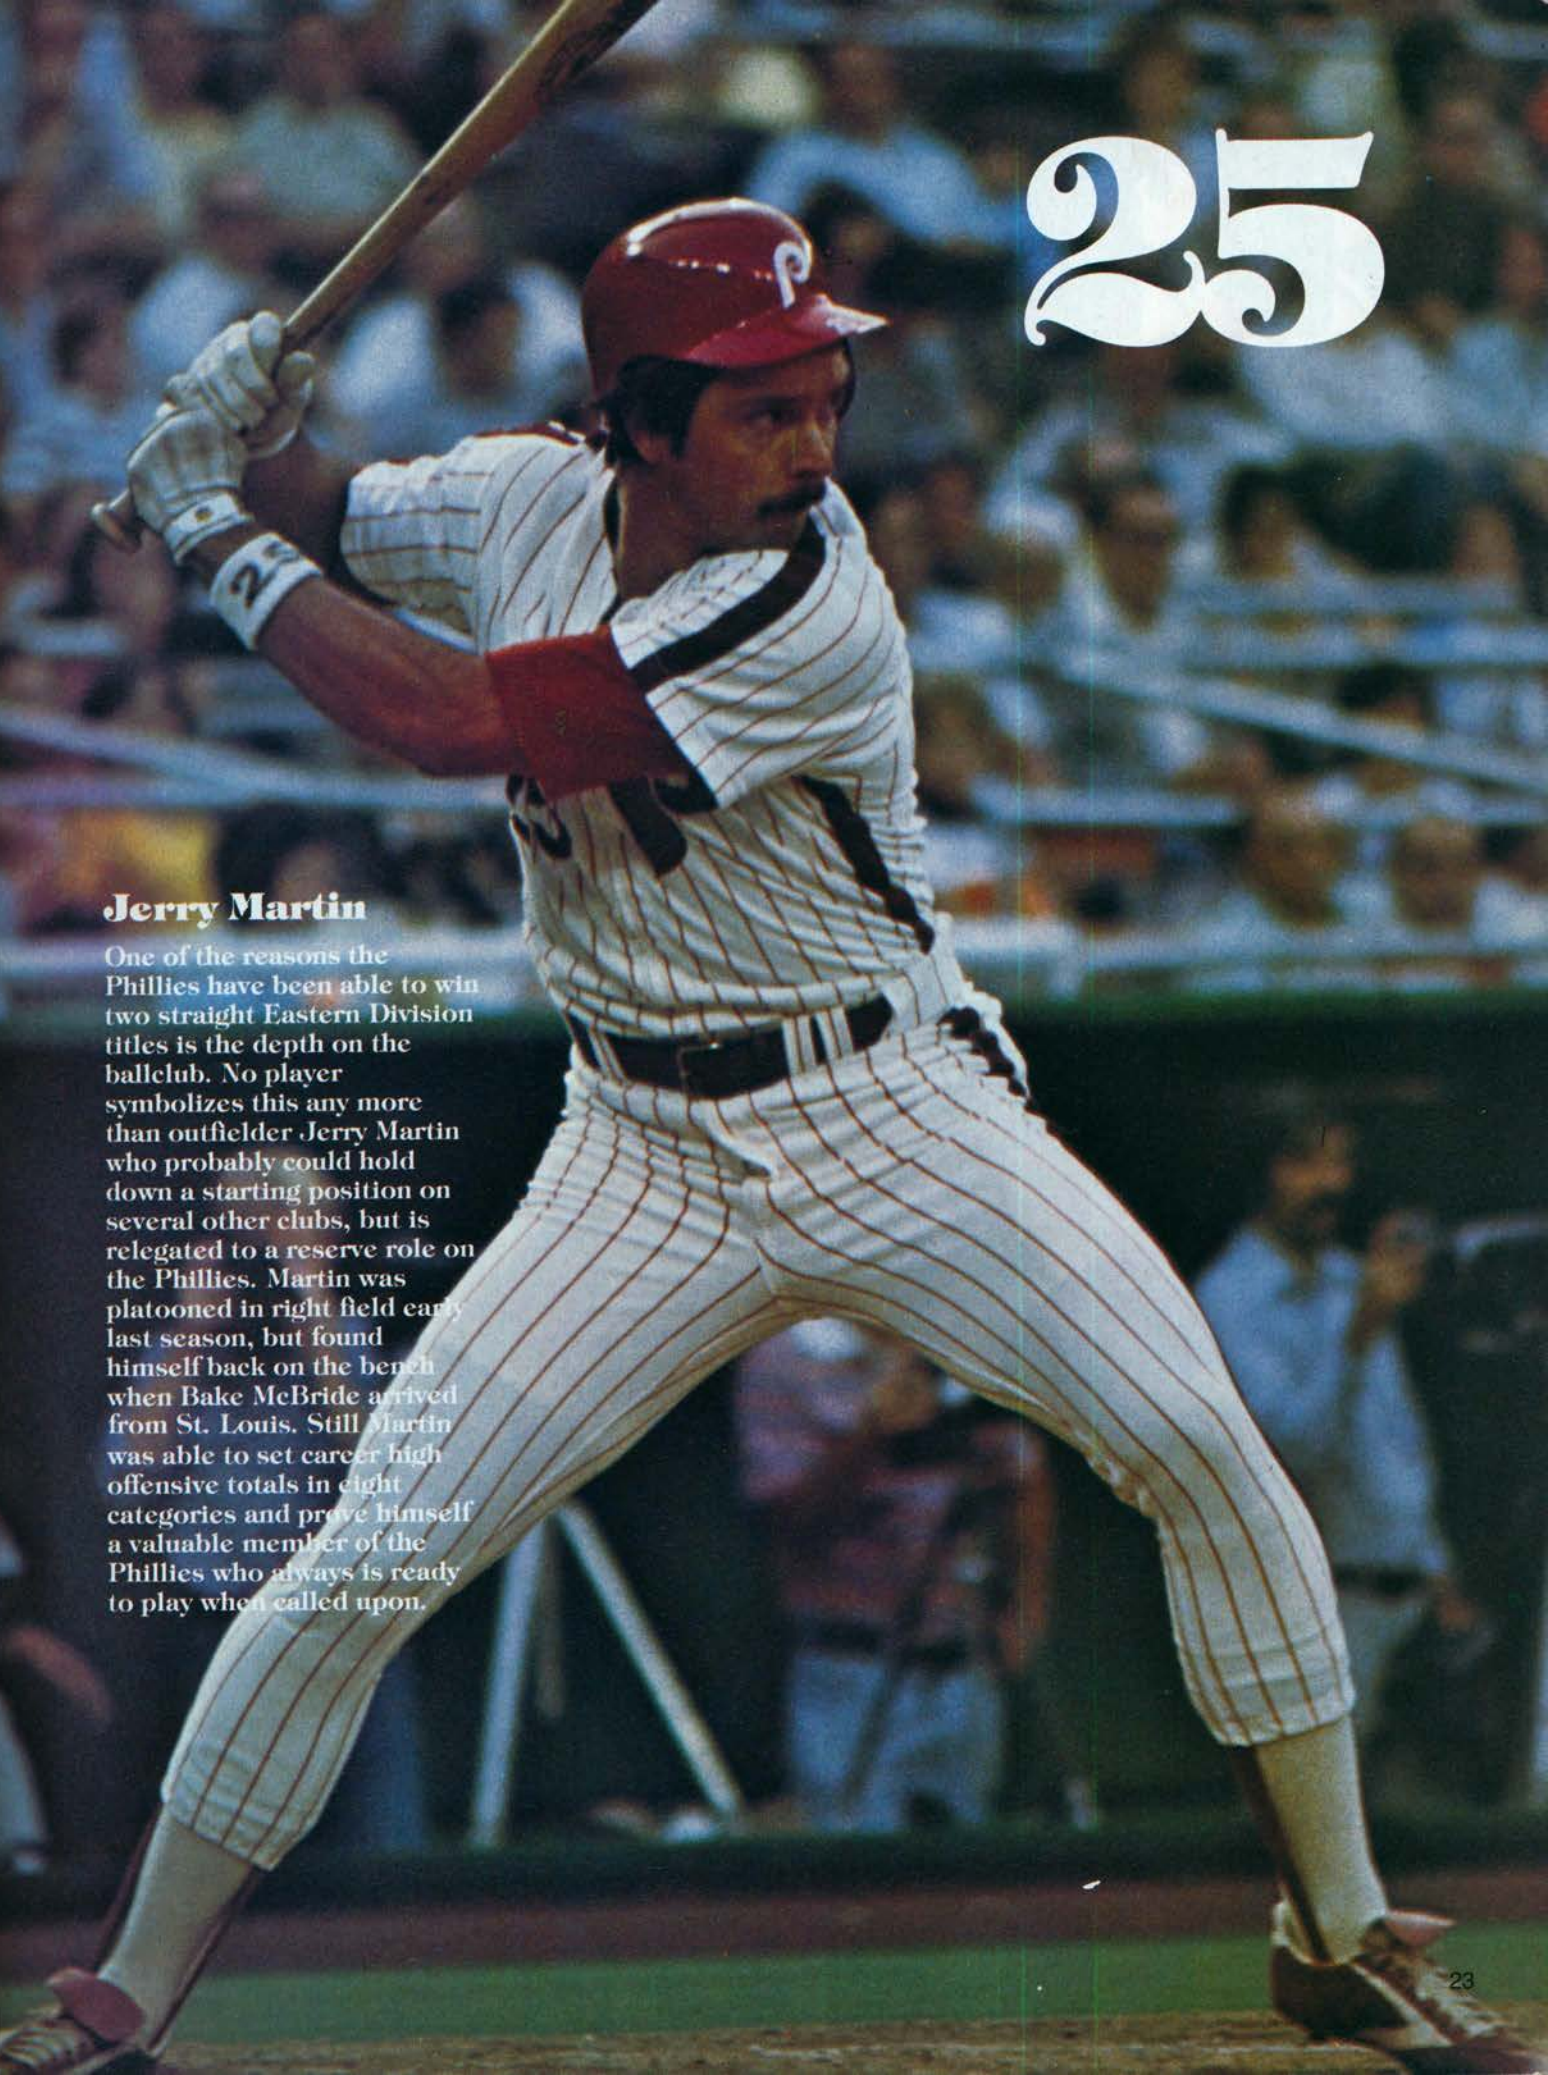
Greg Luzinski

In the past couple seasons, Philadelphia baseball fans have begun to realize what the Phillies players have known for quite some time that Greg Luzinski is the guy who makes the Phillies go. "The Bull" is a quiet individual who just lets his bat do his talking on the baseball field. Talk to him after a game and he's always the same whether he's had a good night or a bad one. Luzinski had a tremendous season last year smashing 39 home runs and finishing a close second to George Foster in the MVP voting. Included in the year was a home run in the All-Star game where he was a starter for the second straight year. Consistency is the perfect term to describe Greg Luzinski, the Phillies complete pro!

31

Garry Maddox

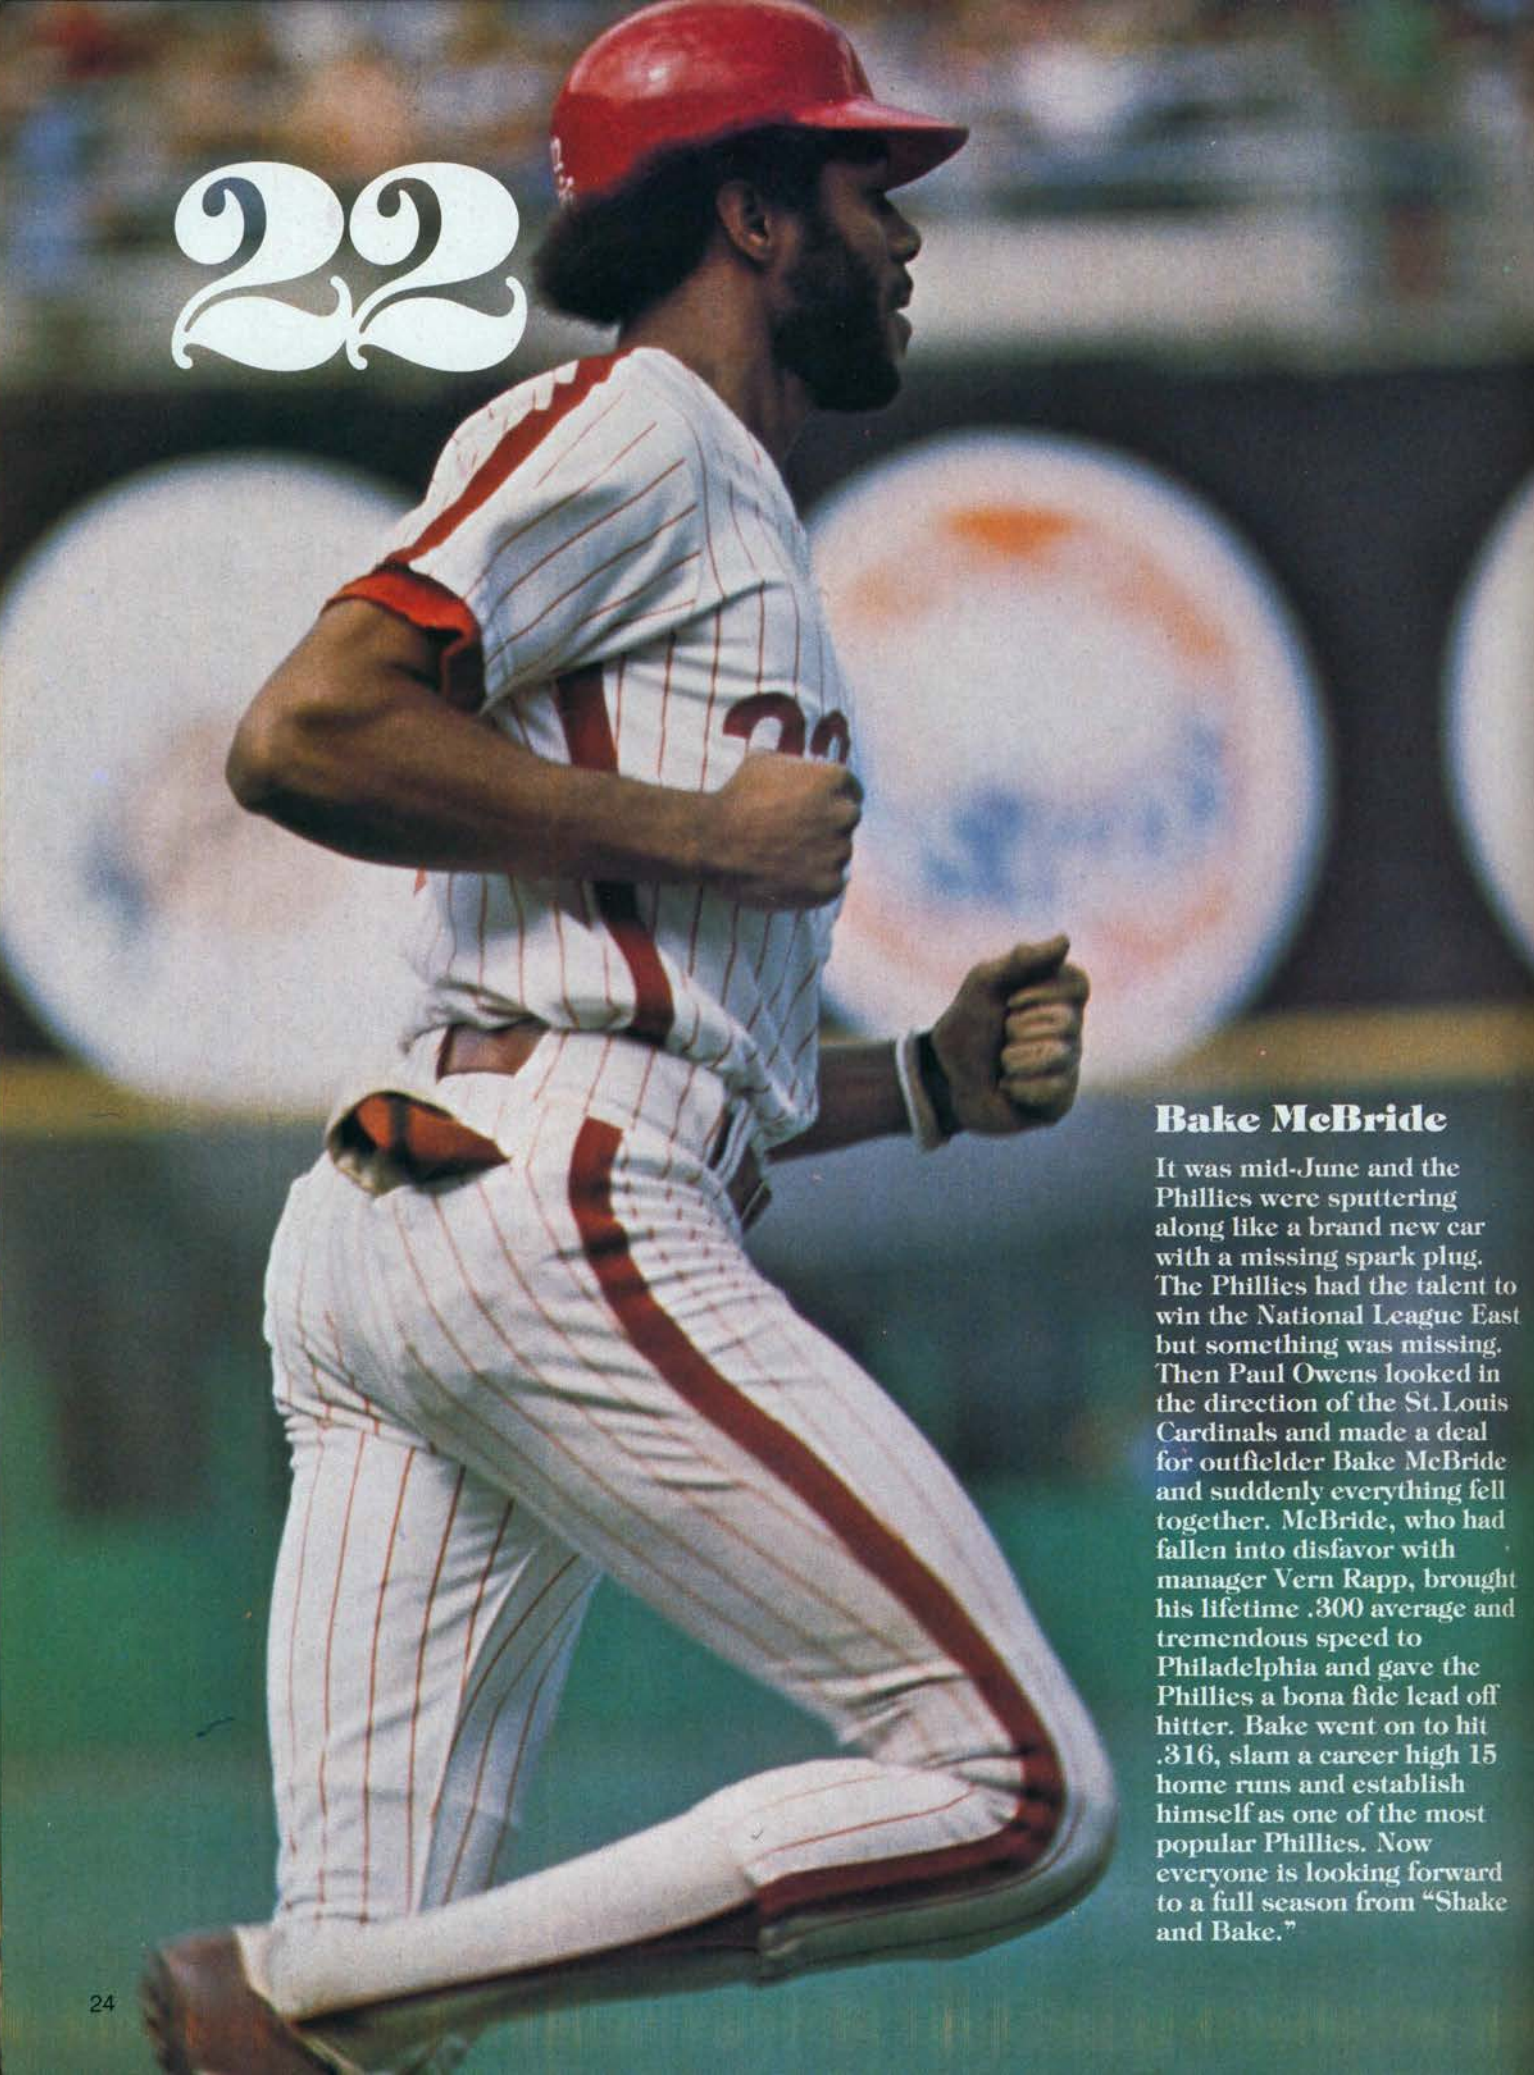
Garry Maddox isn't the type of guy to complain and he'll do anything for the team, but he just doesn't like to lead off. Maddox was forced into the number one spot last season, started the season 4-for-40, then spent the rest of the year trying to dig out. When Bake McBride came over to the Phils in a June trade, Maddox moved down in the order where he felt more comfortable. A shoulder injury in August sidelined him for a while, but he hit well over .300 in August and September and raised his average to a respectable .292 by the end of the season. Garry also picked up his third straight Gold Glove and hit a career high 14 home runs to further establish himself as one of the Phillies most valuable players.



25

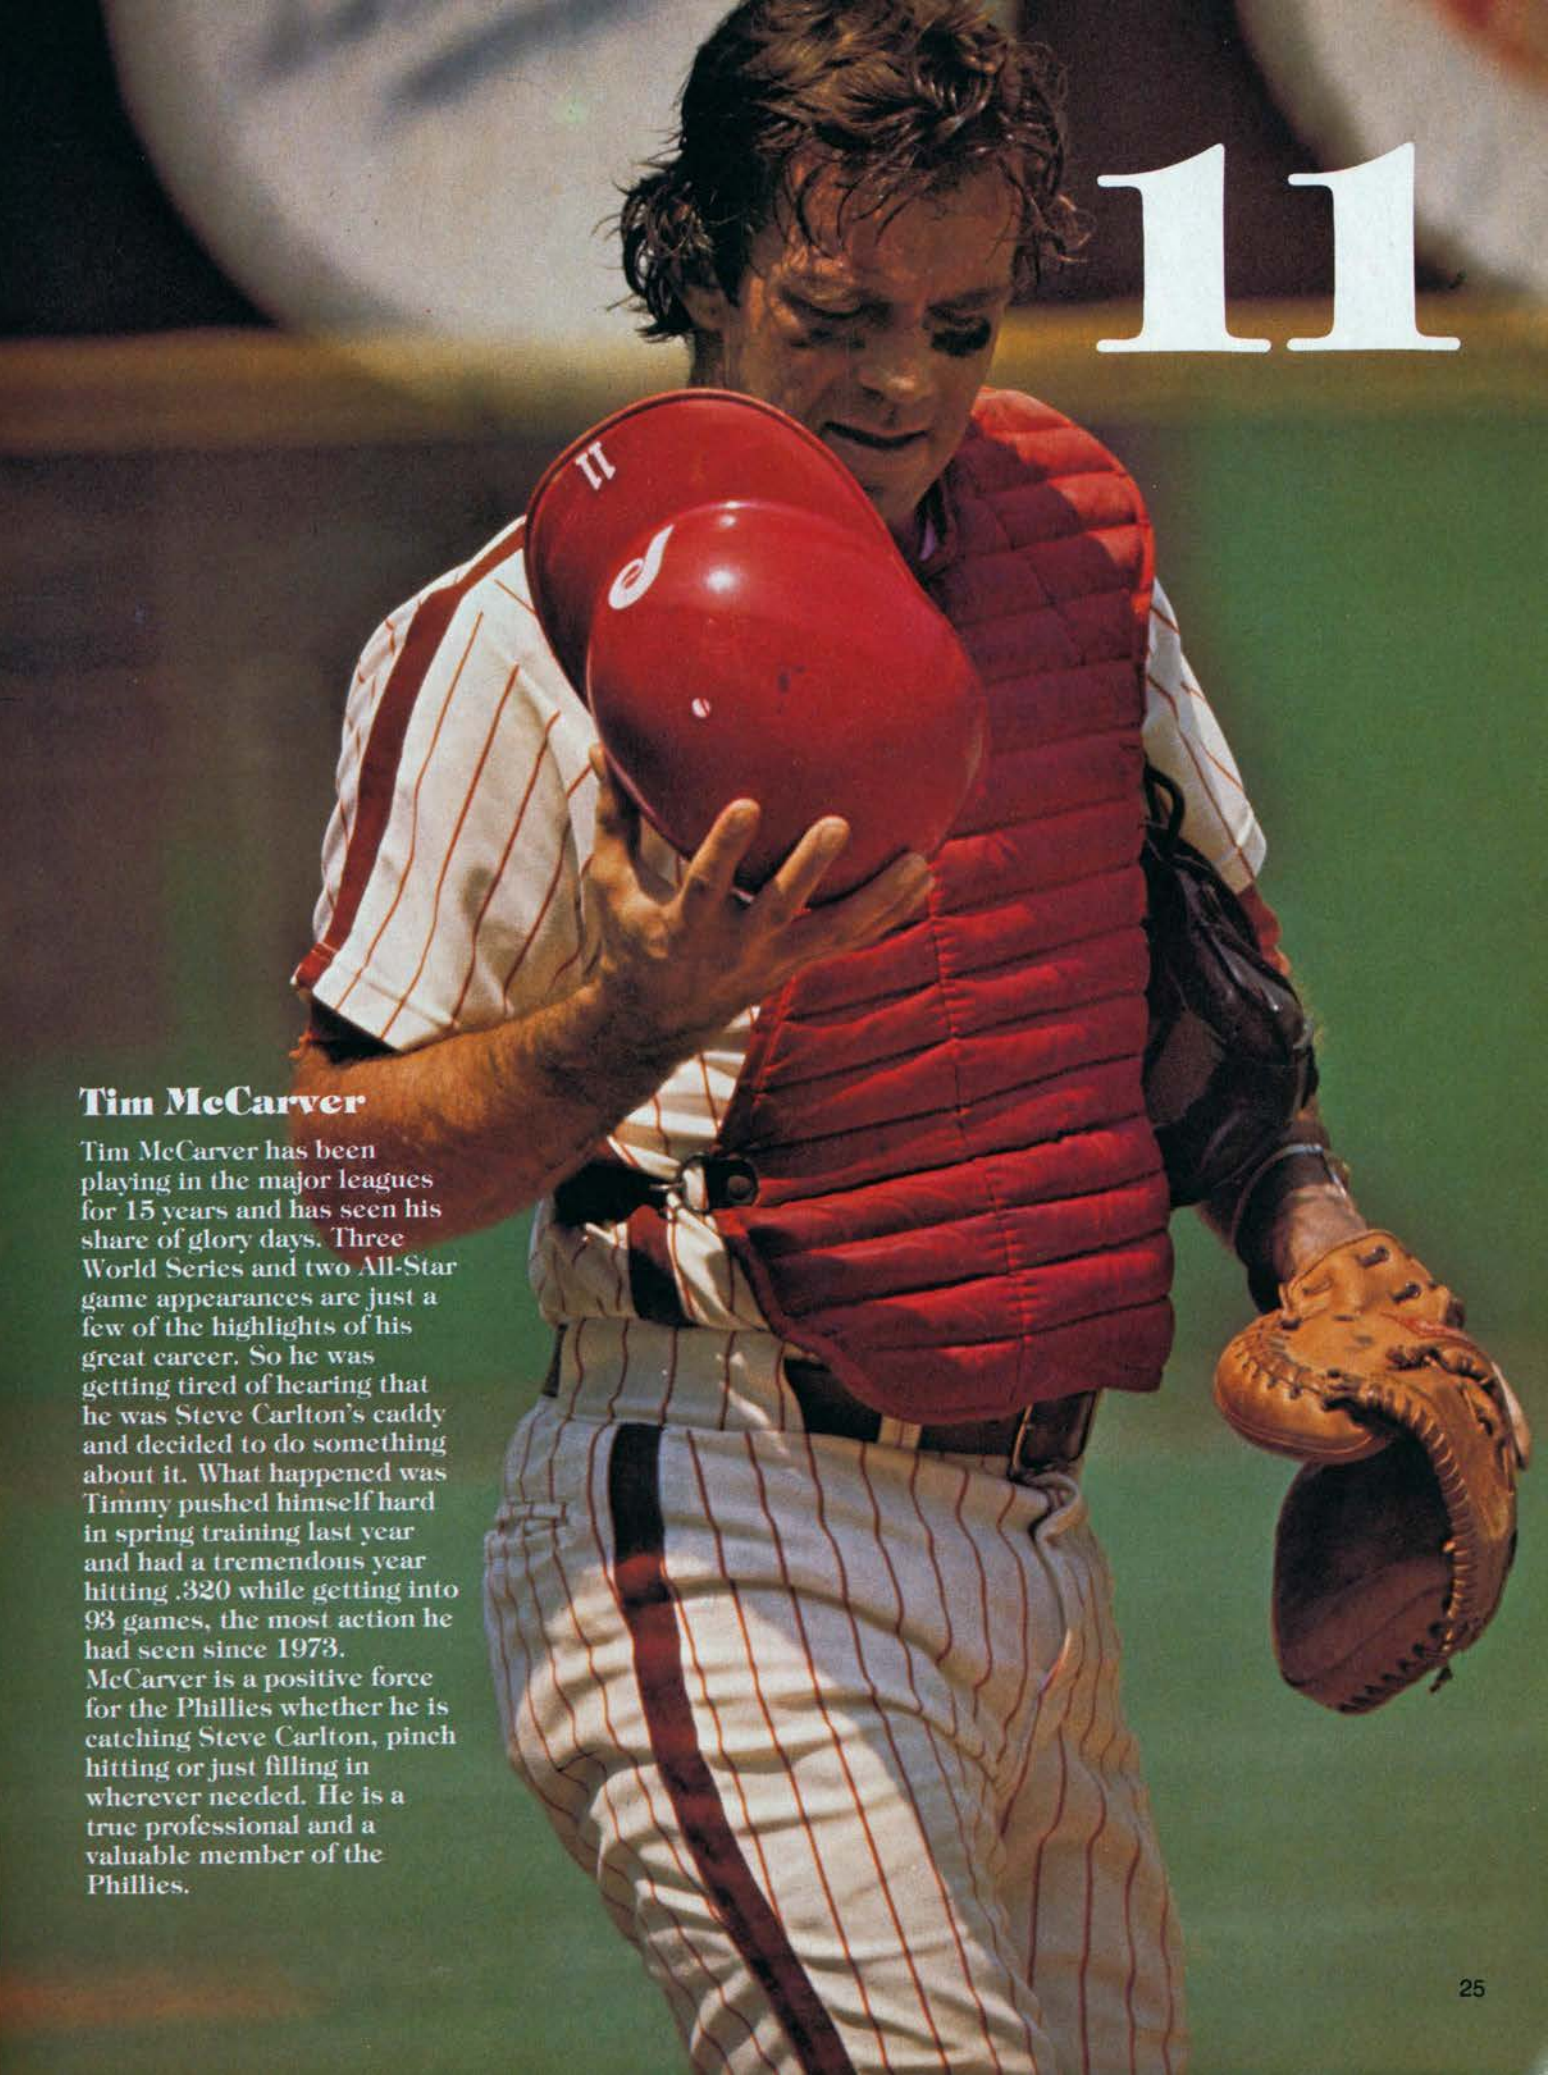
Jerry Martin

One of the reasons the Phillies have been able to win two straight Eastern Division titles is the depth on the ballclub. No player symbolizes this any more than outfielder Jerry Martin who probably could hold down a starting position on several other clubs, but is relegated to a reserve role on the Phillies. Martin was platooned in right field early last season, but found himself back on the bench when Bake McBride arrived from St. Louis. Still Martin was able to set career high offensive totals in eight categories and prove himself a valuable member of the Phillies who always is ready to play when called upon.



Bake McBride

It was mid-June and the Phillies were sputtering along like a brand new car with a missing spark plug. The Phillies had the talent to win the National League East but something was missing. Then Paul Owens looked in the direction of the St. Louis Cardinals and made a deal for outfielder Bake McBride and suddenly everything fell together. McBride, who had fallen into disfavor with manager Vern Rapp, brought his lifetime .300 average and tremendous speed to Philadelphia and gave the Phillies a bona fide lead off hitter. Bake went on to hit .316, slam a career high 15 home runs and establish himself as one of the most popular Phillies. Now everyone is looking forward to a full season from "Shake and Bake."

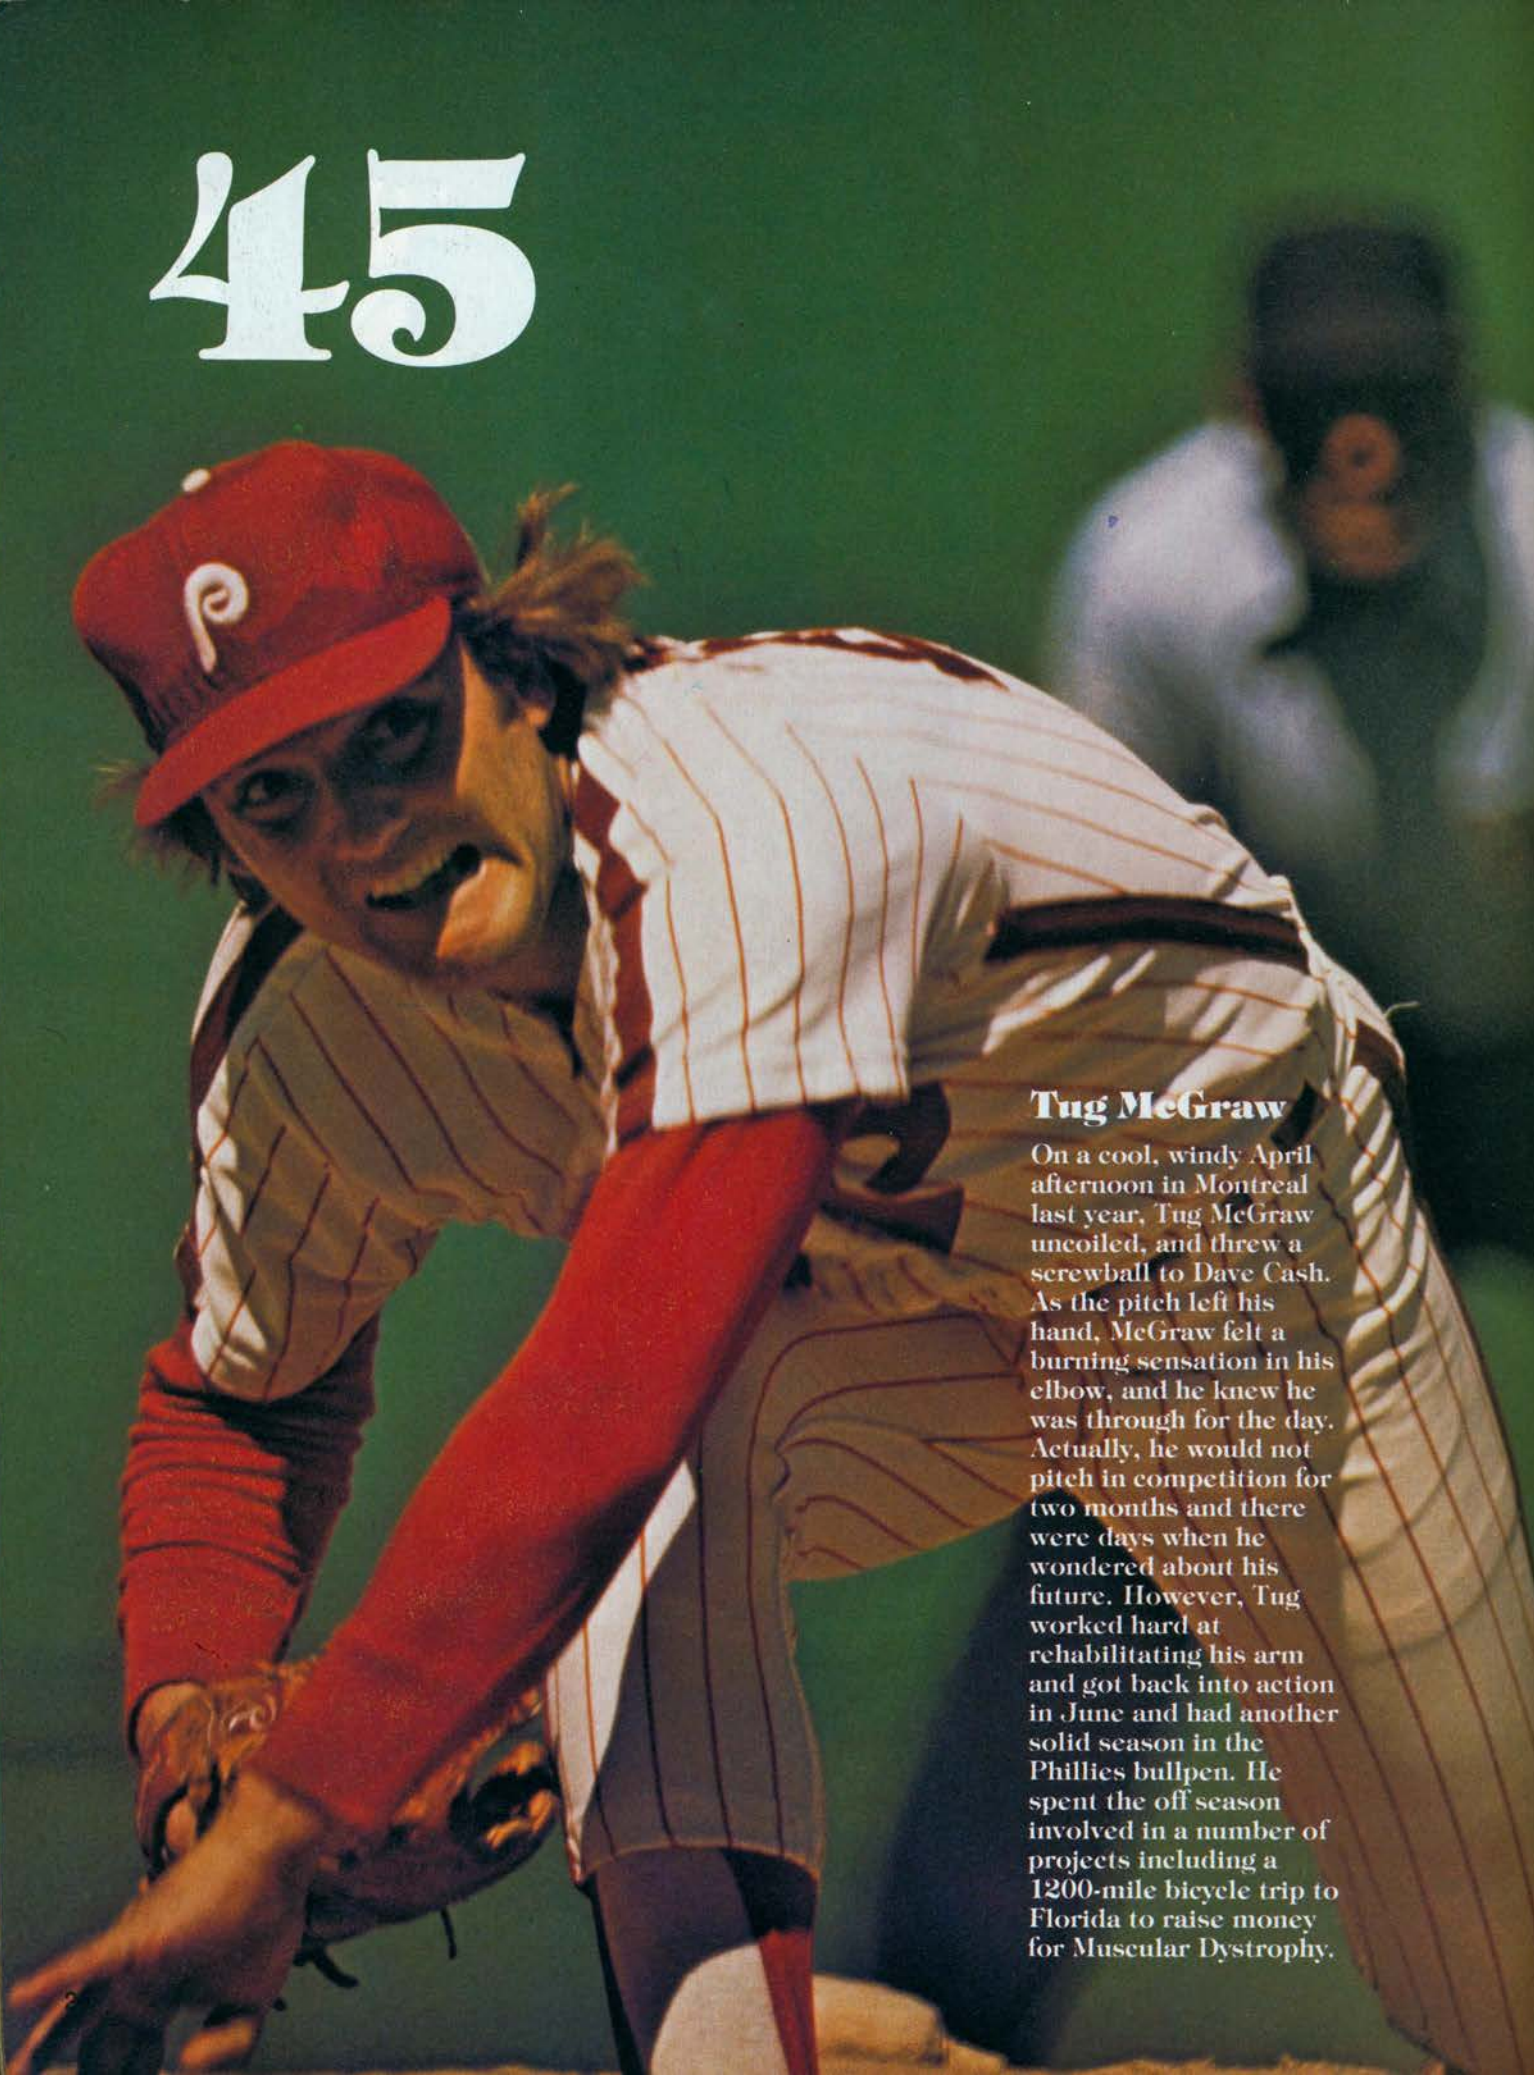


11

Tim McCarver

Tim McCarver has been playing in the major leagues for 15 years and has seen his share of glory days. Three World Series and two All-Star game appearances are just a few of the highlights of his great career. So he was getting tired of hearing that he was Steve Carlton's caddy and decided to do something about it. What happened was Timmy pushed himself hard in spring training last year and had a tremendous year hitting .320 while getting into 93 games, the most action he had seen since 1973. McCarver is a positive force for the Phillies whether he is catching Steve Carlton, pinch hitting or just filling in wherever needed. He is a true professional and a valuable member of the Phillies.

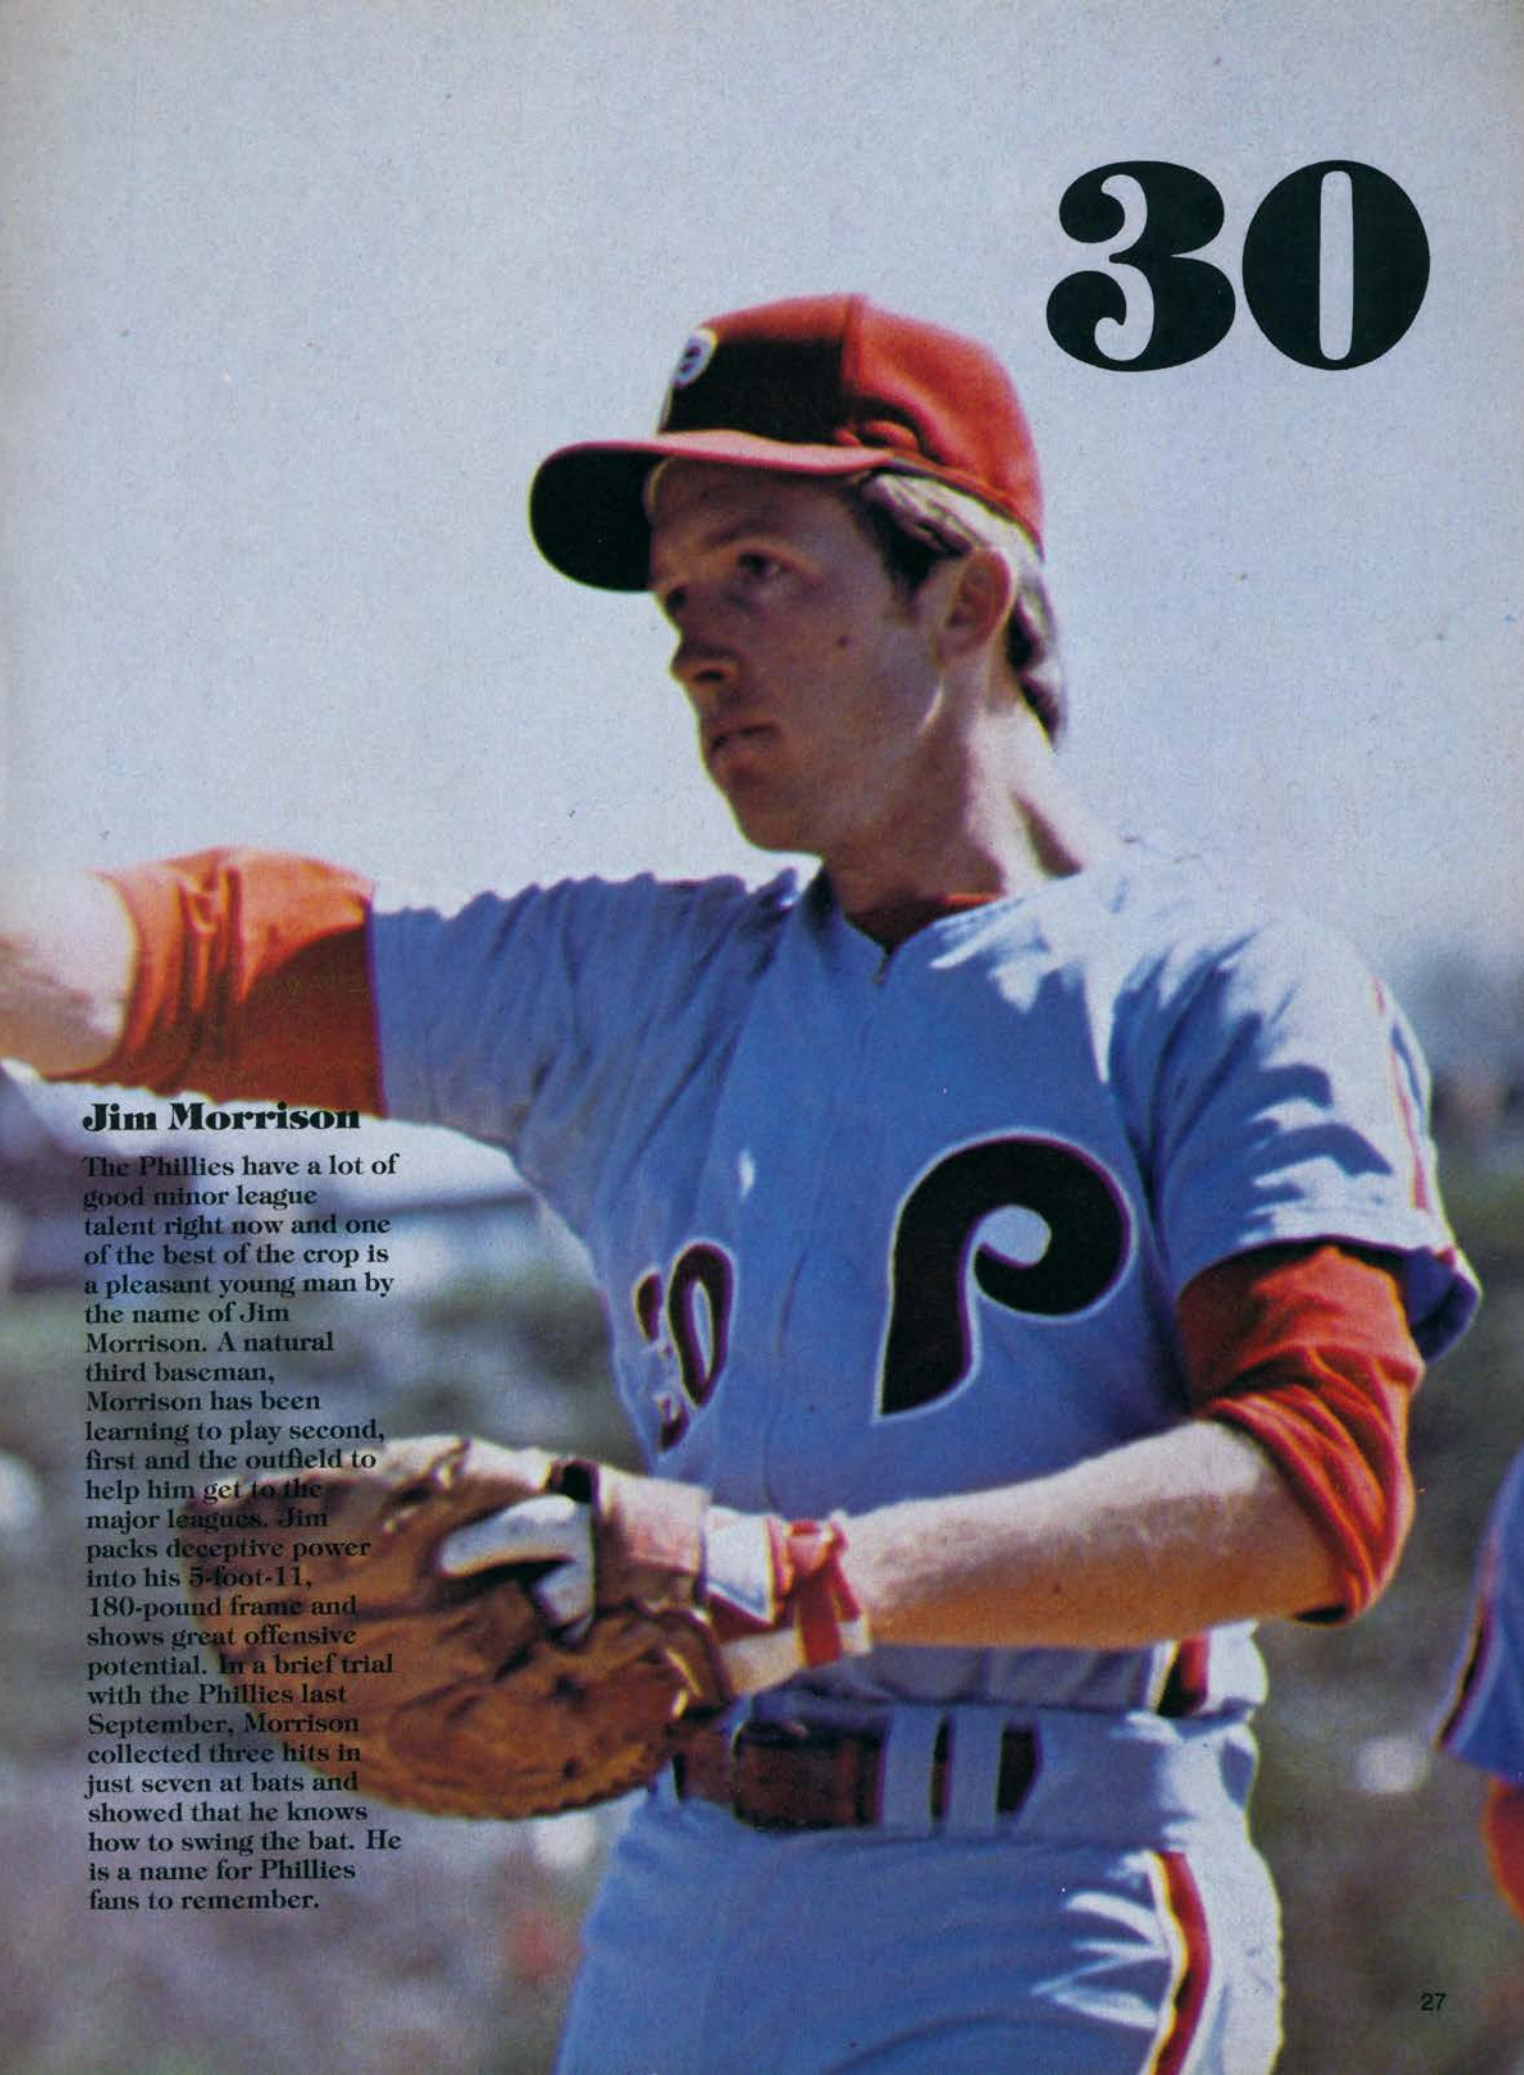
45



Tug McGraw

On a cool, windy April afternoon in Montreal last year, Tug McGraw uncoiled, and threw a screwball to Dave Cash. As the pitch left his hand, McGraw felt a burning sensation in his elbow, and he knew he was through for the day. Actually, he would not pitch in competition for two months and there were days when he wondered about his future. However, Tug worked hard at rehabilitating his arm and got back into action in June and had another solid season in the Phillies bullpen. He spent the off season involved in a number of projects including a 1200-mile bicycle trip to Florida to raise money for Muscular Dystrophy.

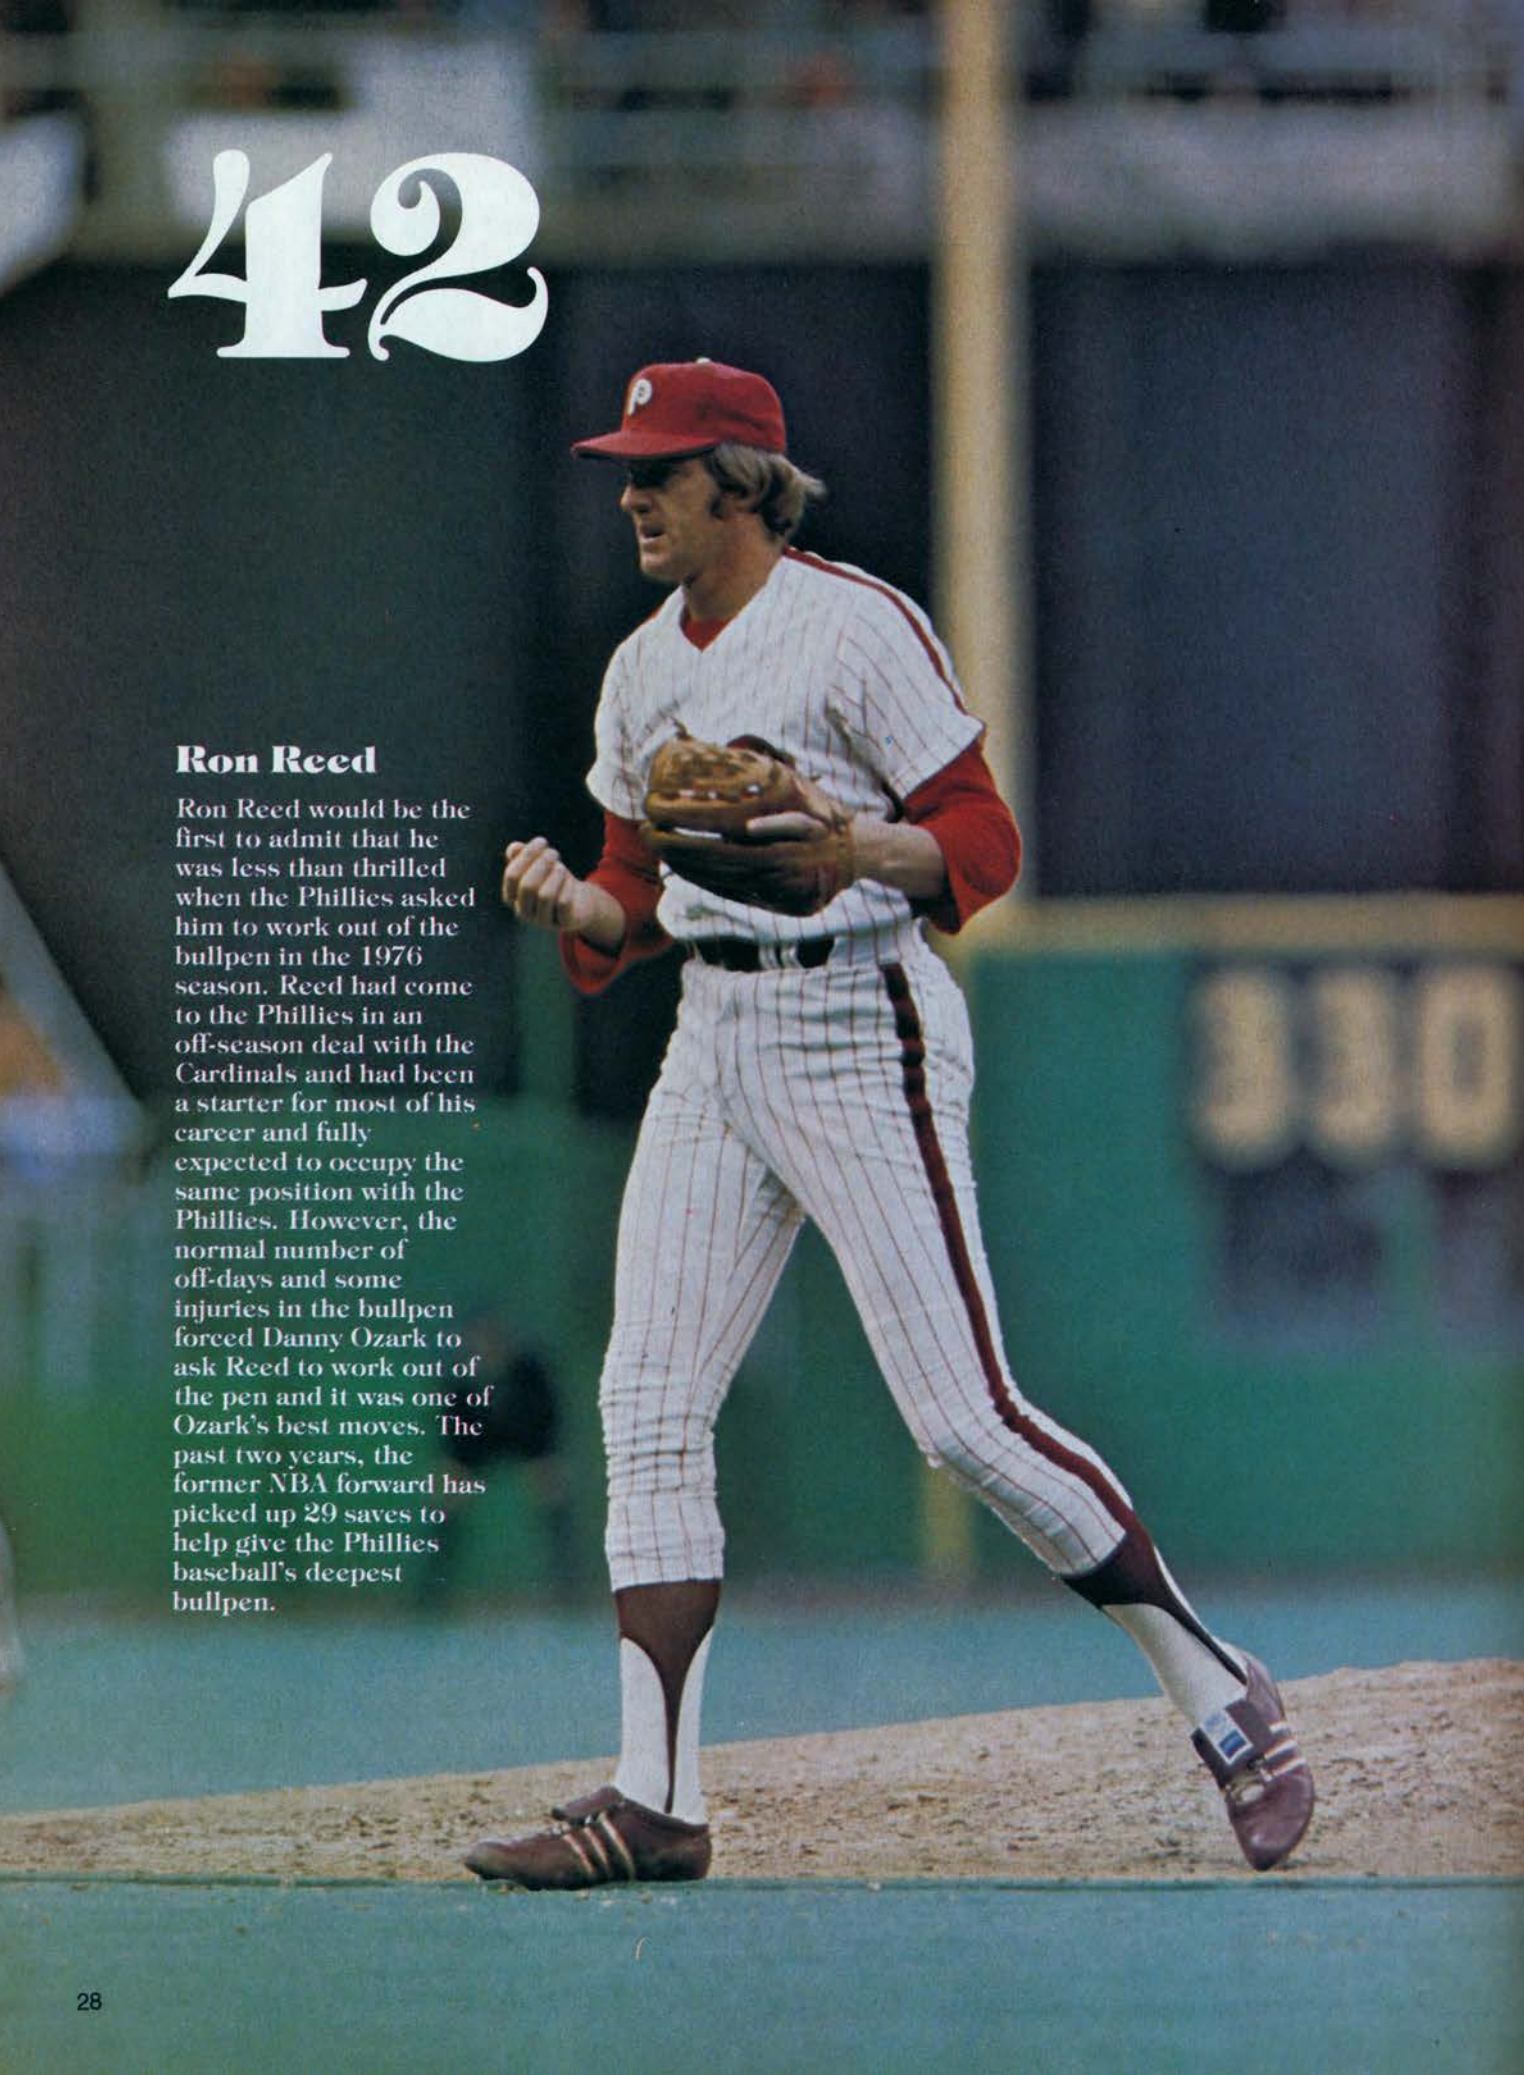
30



Jim Morrison

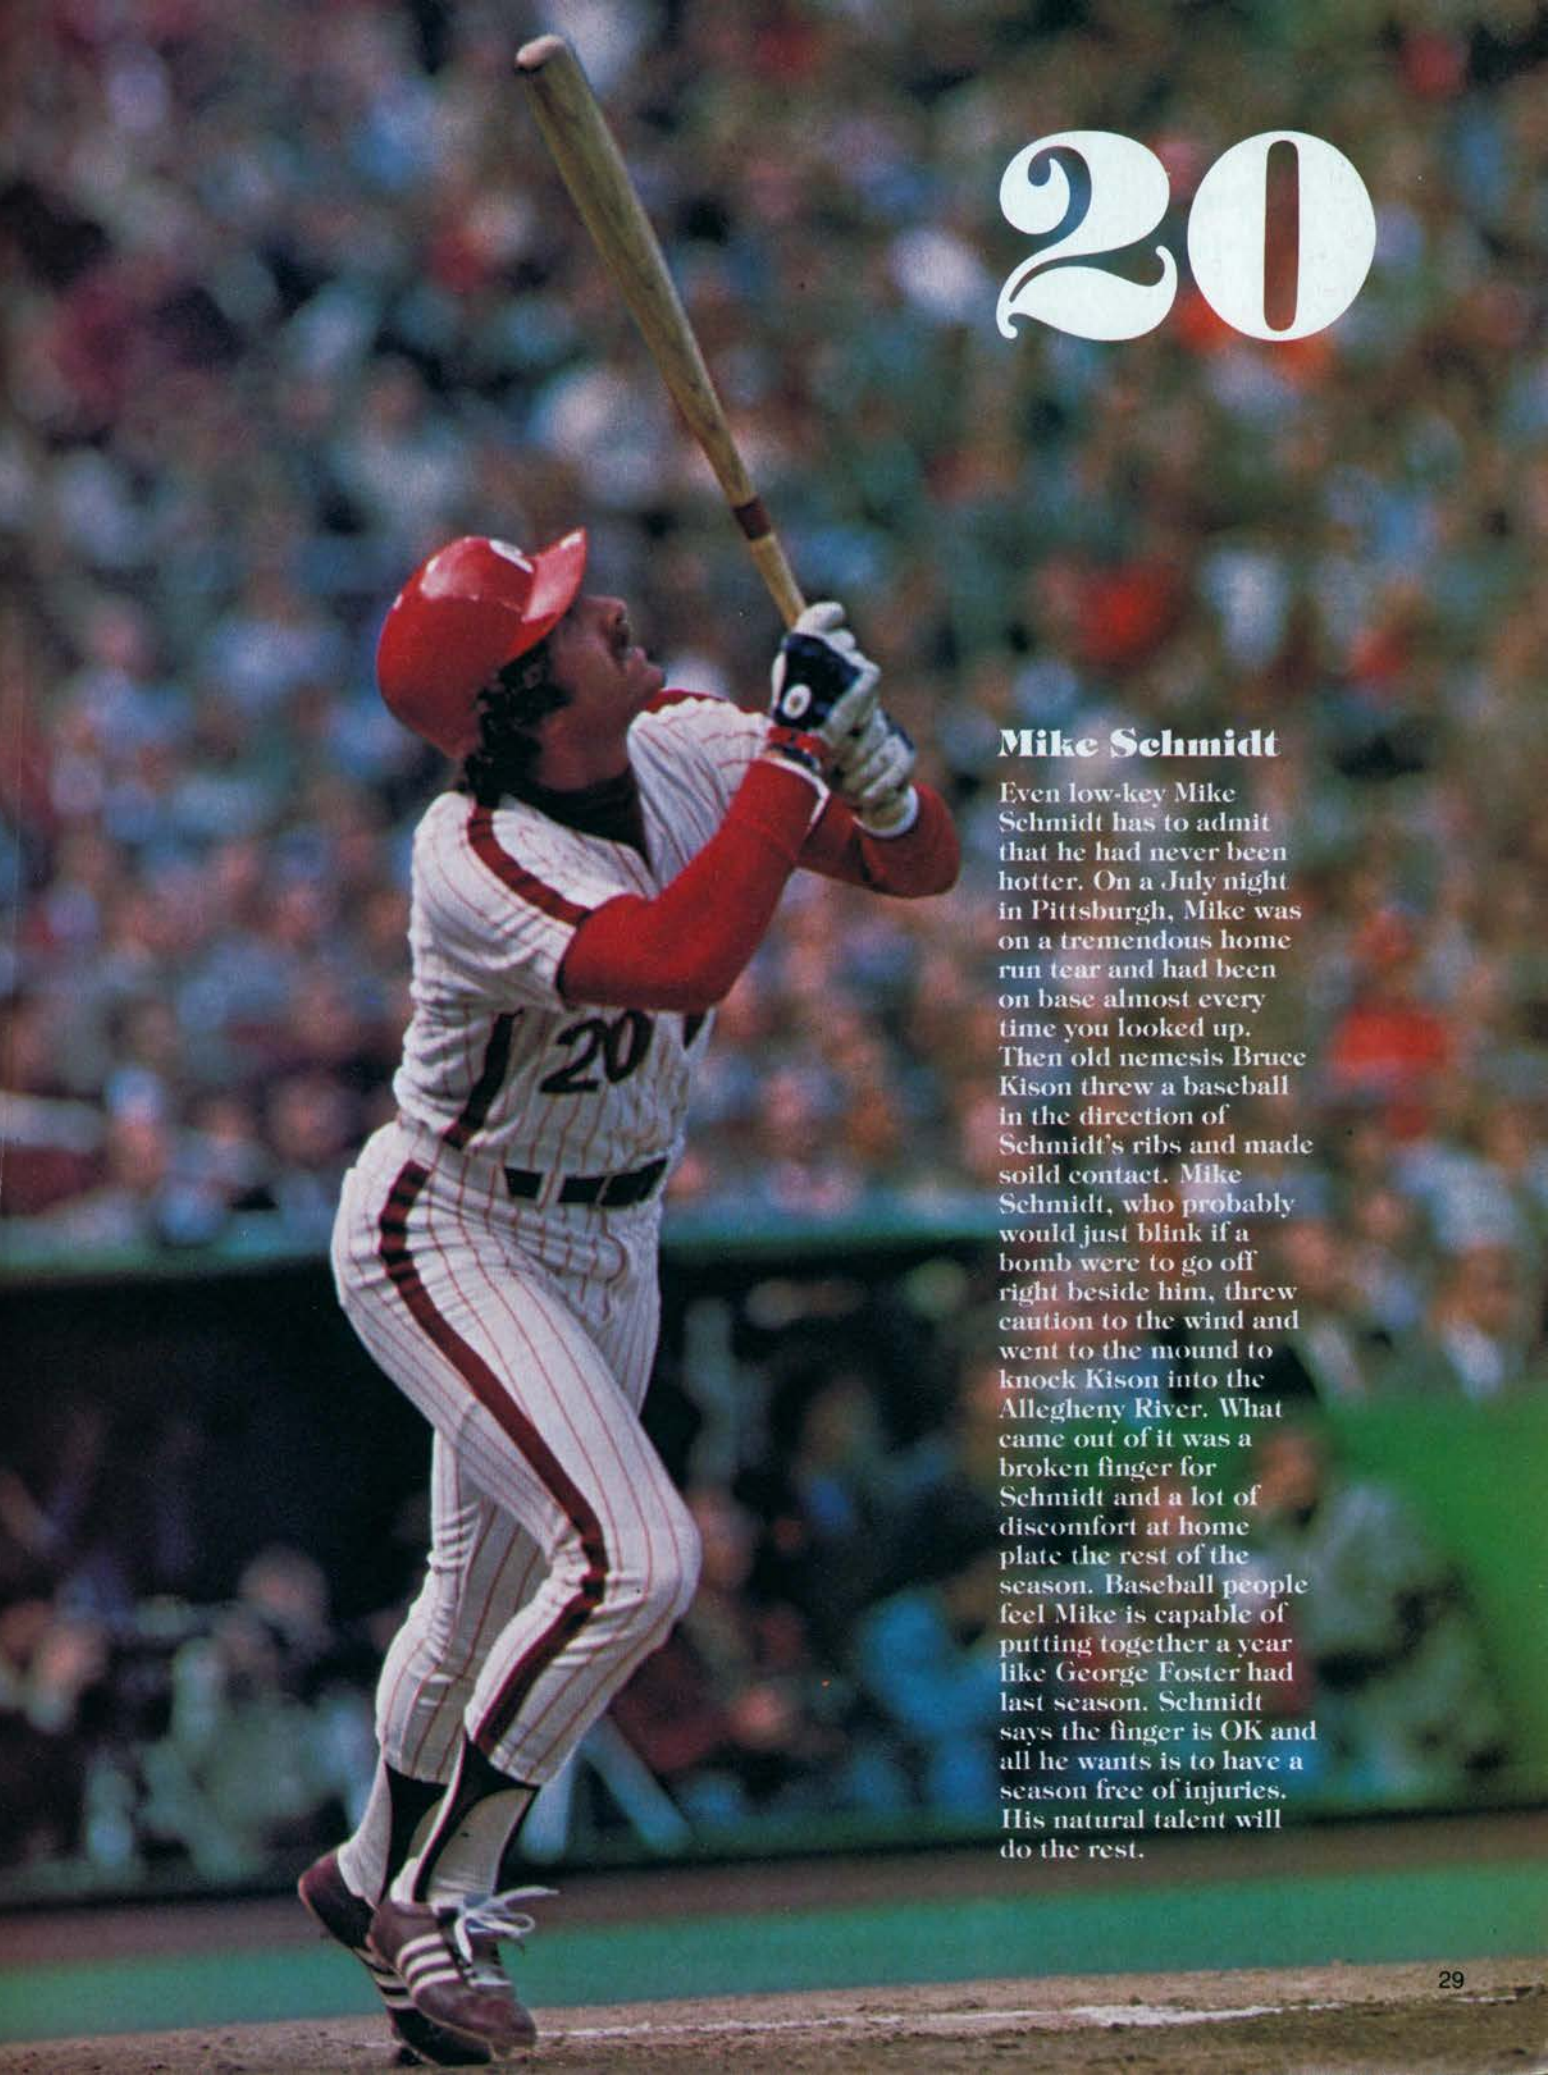
The Phillies have a lot of good minor league talent right now and one of the best of the crop is a pleasant young man by the name of Jim Morrison. A natural third baseman, Morrison has been learning to play second, first and the outfield to help him get to the major leagues. Jim packs deceptive power into his 5-foot-11, 180-pound frame and shows great offensive potential. In a brief trial with the Phillies last September, Morrison collected three hits in just seven at bats and showed that he knows how to swing the bat. He is a name for Phillies fans to remember.

42



Ron Reed

Ron Reed would be the first to admit that he was less than thrilled when the Phillies asked him to work out of the bullpen in the 1976 season. Reed had come to the Phillies in an off-season deal with the Cardinals and had been a starter for most of his career and fully expected to occupy the same position with the Phillies. However, the normal number of off-days and some injuries in the bullpen forced Danny Ozark to ask Reed to work out of the pen and it was one of Ozark's best moves. The past two years, the former NBA forward has picked up 29 saves to help give the Phillies baseball's deepest bullpen.



20

Mike Schmidt

Even low-key Mike Schmidt has to admit that he had never been hotter. On a July night in Pittsburgh, Mike was on a tremendous home run tear and had been on base almost every time you looked up. Then old nemesis Bruce Kison threw a baseball in the direction of Schmidt's ribs and made soild contact. Mike Schmidt, who probably would just blink if a bomb were to go off right beside him, threw caution to the wind and went to the mound to knock Kison into the Allegheny River. What came out of it was a broken finger for Schmidt and a lot of discomfort at home plate the rest of the season. Baseball people feel Mike is capable of putting together a year like George Foster had last season. Schmidt says the finger is OK and all he wants is to have a season free of injuries. His natural talent will do the rest.

Ted Sizemore

The most asked question among Philadelphia Phillies baseball fans last winter was "Who's going to be the Phils second baseman?" Dave Cash had played out his option and headed for Montreal and the Phillies had several players in the running. However as far as Ted Sizemore was concerned, the job was his until somebody showed they could play the position better. Sizemore had come to the Phillies in an off-season deal with the Dodgers and took over at second and did a tremendous job hitting a solid .281 and leading National League second baseman with 104 double plays. "Size" gives the Phillies a good fundamental player at an important position and the Phils are happy to have him.

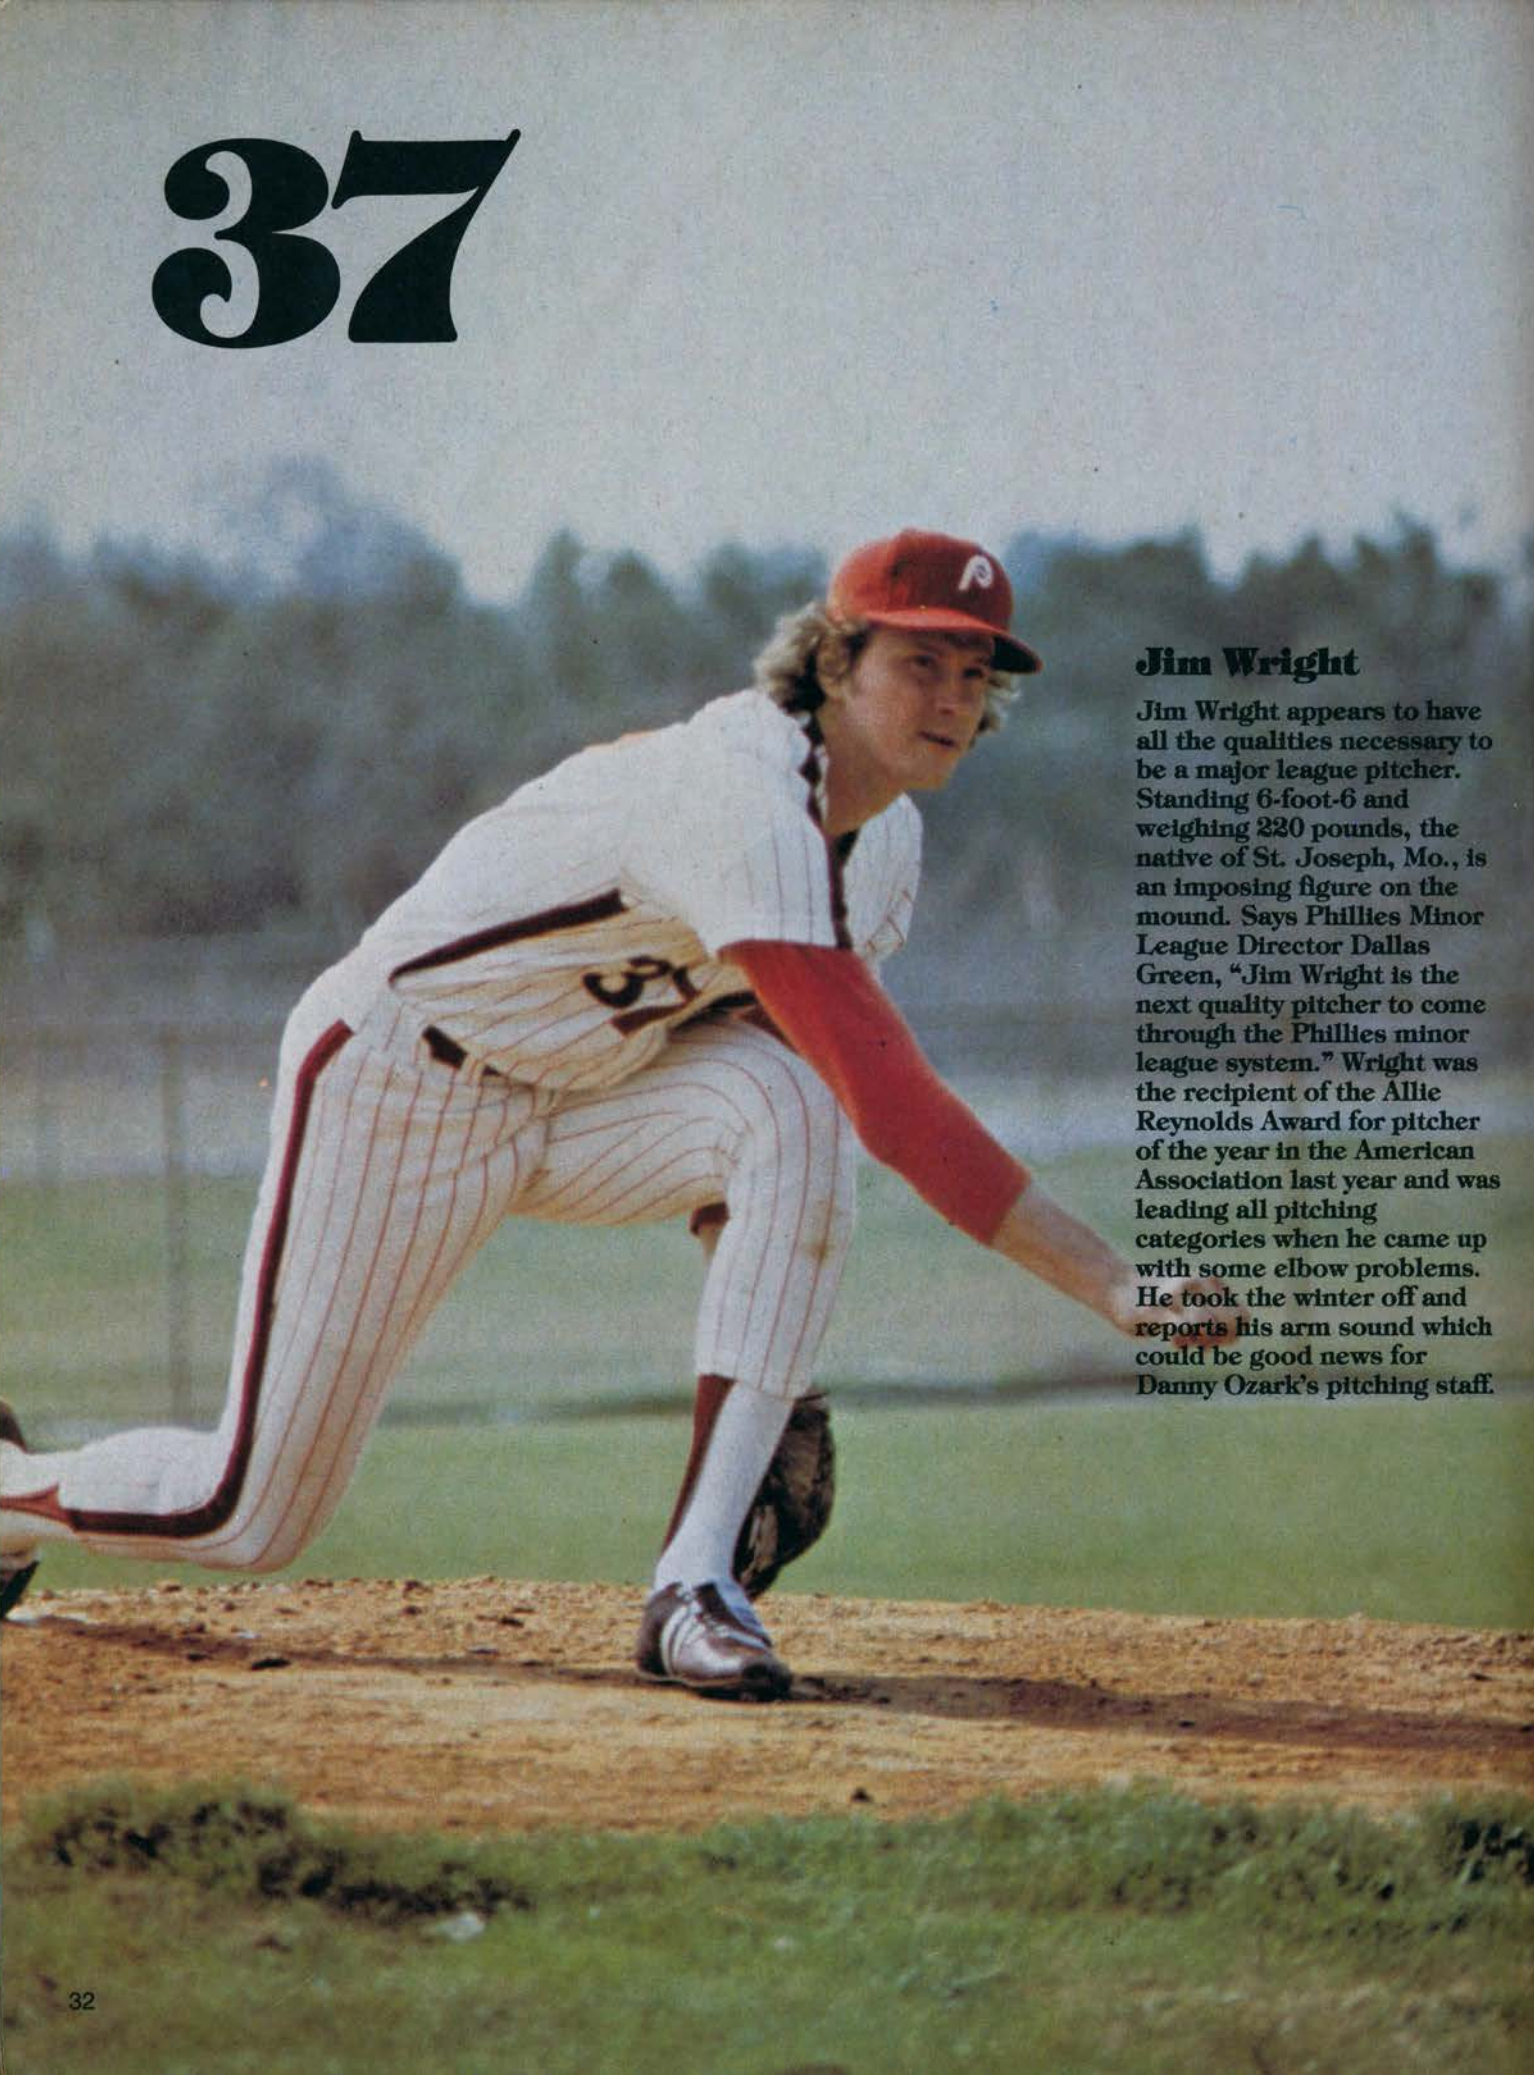
Steve Waterbury

Greg Luzinski was sitting around the Phillies clubhouse before an exhibition game this spring and was talking about a pitching performance he had witnessed the day before in Sarasota. "You know," said the Bull, "I've been swinging and missing at that forkball of Bruce Sutter's for so long that it's nice to stand out there and see one of our guys make a hitter look so bad." The forkball belonged to righthander Steve Waterbury who came to the Phillies last year from the Cardinals in the Bake McBride deal which has turned out to be one of Paul Owen's finest trades. The 26-year-old Waterbury has these long, thin fingers that are perfect for the forkball and for making enemy batters look bad which is just fine as far as Greg Luzinski and his teammates are concerned.

37



Jim Wright

Jim Wright appears to have all the qualities necessary to be a major league pitcher. Standing 6-foot-6 and weighing 220 pounds, the native of St. Joseph, Mo., is an imposing figure on the mound. Says Phillies Minor League Director Dallas Green, "Jim Wright is the next quality pitcher to come through the Phillies minor league system." Wright was the recipient of the Allie Reynolds Award for pitcher of the year in the American Association last year and was leading all pitching categories when he came up with some elbow problems. He took the winter off and reports his arm sound which could be good news for Danny Ozark's pitching staff.

Danny Ozark

"I felt he would be the best man we could get to turn this organization around. He comes from a winning tradition. Danny was Alston's righthand man and is a high-type individual like Alston.

"The Dodgers have the best team organization in baseball because they are fundamentalists. Danny can teach this to our young players. He's a low-key man who can get the most out of young ballplayers and still maintain the necessary discipline," Paul Owens, Nov. 2, 1972.

Winning. . .

"He is not a screamer like Billy Martin. He is not an umpire baiter like Earl Weaver. He is not a cheerleader like Tom Lasorda. But let us at least give Danny Ozark his due. He has made the Phillies a winner," Bill Lyon, Philadelphia Inquirer, Aug. 28, 1977.

Yes, Danny Ozark, who came here after 30 years in the Dodgers organization, has made the Phillies a winner. Under Ozark the Phillies have gone from the bottom to the top. He got to the top this season (Aug. 5) on his 400th win since coming here when his Phils beat his former club.

"I've been here with this club as long as he has," relates Tommy Hutton. "And I've never thought he's gotten the credit he should have. All I know he came here and took us from last to third to second to first. That doesn't seem too shabby."

Fundamentals. . .

"Danny is solid on fundamentals," says Larry Bowa. "He's a stickler on fundamentals," says Ted Sizemore.

"I know a lot of people think he isn't too swift. But I'll tell you, he has us executing. He takes all the blame when things go wrong and he gives us all the credit when things go right."

"And I am still amazed at the abuse he takes. In fact, I think he takes too much BS. But then, I've never been accused of having a very long fuse myself," added Bowa.

Discipline. . .

"Danny's no crowd pleaser. I mean he doesn't run out there and assault an umpire on a close call. But don't think he can't blow up. I've seen him rattle the walls and unhinge the doors when he thought we needed it," Hutton said.

Sizemore adds more about Ozark and his methods. "Listen, it's a lousy job, trying to handle 25 different personalities, knowing who can take criticism, who to lay off of, who to call in your office.

"You know, he's old enough to be the father of most guys on this team. Now you'd get that old generation gap in most cases like that, so bad neither side would talk to the other. But he'll ask a lot of players on this team their opinion. And, if you give him a good reason, he'll change his thinking."

Winning. . . fundamentals. . . discipline. . . that's what Owens asked Danny to deliver. Mr. Ozark has done that.

But, it hasn't been a one-man effort. Danny's five aides are among the best in baseball. Matter of fact, Billy DeMars-Bobby Wine-Ray Rippelmeyer-Carroll Beringer have been together longer than any other coaching foursome in the league.

Added to that quartet this season was popular and knowledgeable Tony Taylor.

There isn't a harder working staff in baseball. Their efforts don't get much attention but in the end they, too, like Ozark deserve a lot of credit.

Double-Barrelled Trouble

This is one of those old-fashioned good-news, bad-news stories.

The good news lies in the fact that Phillie Phanatics are being treated to baseball's No. 1-2 home-run hitting duo in Mike Schmidt and Greg Luzinski.

Over the last four seasons, Schmidt has belted 150 homers, tops among all players. Add Greg's 101 and you have 251 by the middle of the Phillies batting order.

If the Bull hadn't hurt his knee in 1974 and maintained his average of 31 per year, he would have a total of 125, which would rank second to his teammate.

Better than good news is the best news—Schmidt and Luzinski are young enough to continue thrilling the Phillie Phanatic fans. Mike is 28, Bull a year younger.

And, that's the bad news for opposing pitchers in the National League. Facing this powerful duo isn't exactly the most pleasurable job.

What is it like facing the two-barrel Phillies power punch?

"They are undoubtedly the best 1-2 power combination in baseball today. Hitting back-to-back makes them even tougher than they might be. Facing them is never a pleasant job," Atlanta Braves Phil Niekro.

"I try to bear down extra hard against them because they are the two Phillies who can break the game open with one swing. You know you can't afford to make a mistake with them," St. Louis Cardinals Bob Forsch.

"Both Luzinski and Schmidt are good power hitters. Each has different and additional abilities which makes them outstanding ball players. In a tough situation, Luzinski is one of the hardest guys to get out because of his ability to hit your best pitch," Pittsburgh Pirates Jerry Reuss.

"I pitch them like everyone else. I try to stay ahead so I can make my pitch instead of theirs. No matter how you pitch them, they are going to get their share of home runs. Just hope it's your day or they're in a slump when you have to face them," Chicago Cubs Rick Reuschel.

"Mike Schmidt and Greg Luzinski are one of the toughest one-two punches in baseball. They have great power and each can break open a game at any time. I respect both of them as much as any hitters in baseball," Cincinnati Reds Tom Seaver.

"It's one of the bigger challenges to me to pitch against them, back-to-back. They not only hit for power, they also hit for solid averages. I'm a strikeout pitcher and a fast ball pitcher and that's what they like to hit. I like to challenge them. Even though they are fast ball hitters and I'm a fast ball pitcher, I get them out. I guess my fast ball is faster than their bats," San Francisco Giants John (The Count) Montefusco.

"They certainly took the place of such hitters as Clemente, Mays and Aaron. A pitcher realizes either one of these guys can beat you. If you can't get them out more than half the time, it's almost impossible to beat the Phils," New York Mets Jerry Koosman.

"They are two tough guys to face back-to-back. Both are capable of hitting a pitch out of any ball park. Their hitting styles are 180 degrees different. Each has strengths on different pitches. They are awesome. I wouldn't mind if Danny Ozark put Bowa in between the two of them this year," Los Angeles Dodgers Don Sutton.

Phillies Phanatics!

It was one of those unforgettable events that will remain etched in the minds of those in attendance.

The Dodgers Burt Hooton was sailing along with a 2-0 lead in the third game of the Championship Series last Fall when the Phillies loaded the bases.

Pitcher Larry Christenson was the batter and Hooton made the mistake of getting behind in the count.

Almost instinctively, like a fighter sensing a knockout, the crowd of nearly 64,000 started to yell at the Dodger righthander. And they yelled, and they yelled, and they yelled until they completely unnerved Hooton to the point that he went to pieces, walked in three runs and finally had to leave the ballgame.

The incident probably was the classic example of the effect the Philadelphia baseball fan, the Phillie Phanatic, can have on a game.

It was a classic example of the fact Phillies fans aren't observers, they are participants.

Respected as the most knowledgeable fans in the game and certainly ranking with the most vocal of crowds, the baseball fans of Philadelphia are loyal to their team.

Even in the lean years when the Phillies were finishing dead last, fans continued to pour into Veterans Stadium. Now that the team is one of the best in all of baseball, the fans are coming through the turnstiles in record numbers.

Last year the Phillies set an all-time club attendance record of 2,700,070.

This remarkable total ranks third in baseball history for a season total behind the Los Angeles Dodgers one season marks in 1962 and last year.

Ask almost any player in the National League where he would like to play and one of his top choices would be Philadelphia.

Richie Hebner heard those roaring crowds when he wore the uniform of the Pittsburgh Pirates and says that was one of the reasons why he decided to sign with the Phillies last year.

Says Hebner, "You really get juiced up playing in Philly. You just wouldn't believe how many guys talk to me at first base and say how much they would like to play at the Vet."

Al Oliver, now a member of the Texas Rangers, won't be hearing the Philadelphia fans any more, but he had tremendous respect for the manner in which they can affect the outcome of a ballgame.

"The Phillies really can be proud of their fans," says Oliver. "They sure can roar with the best of them. I think those people could wake up a dead man!"

At beautiful Veterans Stadium, Phillie Phanatics are treated to more than just great, exciting baseball.

There's something for everyone from the highly entertaining scoreboard system, the lively music of organist Paul Richardson, attractive usherettes, dancing waters, cash scramble, fireworks, tube socks day, college night, ladies tote bag day, ski cap night. This list goes on and on.

It's easy to see why Phillies fans are Phanatics.

THE POPE AND HIS PUPIL

By HAL BODLEY
Sports Editor, Wilmington News-Journal Papers

Toughness and hardness.

Ruly Carpenter thrived on both. Just for kicks he'd gather several of his friends together and on sub-freezing nights in the dead of winter, they'd sit by the hour on ice-covered dumps and shoot rats.

When he was a two-way end on Yale's undefeated football team in 1960, Ruly Carpenter would go one-on-one with anybody and loved it. As captain of the university's baseball team, his idea of fun was to crash into the catcher and send him sprawling back to the dugout—or campus infirmary.

But when Ruly Carpenter started going one-on-one with his mentor, he met his match.

Paul Owens doesn't remember the first time he met the young of son of Phillies' owner Bob Carpenter.

"I think it was in 1963," Owens said the other day, "but I really didn't get to know him until he came to Florida in the spring of 1964."

Carpenter, who was on a shakedown cruise that would end in the Phillies' presidency in November of 1972, was dispatched by his father to learn first-hand what was going on at the team's lowest minor-league level. At Leesburg, Fla., Ruly was installed as camp administrator, working under Paul Owens who was camp coordinator.

"He was in charge of all the business operations and I took care of all on-the-field matters," Owens said. "It didn't take him very long to get involved with everything we were doing. He always pictured himself as hard and tough for a 23-year-older, but we still talk about one night in camp when it was decided to release a pitcher from Panama.

"It was almost dark outside and I was in the shower. I heard Ruly knocking on my door and saying something about us not giving the boy a fair shake. Ruly was supposed to be so tough, but the kid had backed him down.

"I said, 'Ruly, everybody gets a fair chance; we don't release these guys unless they're washed out.'

" 'Sure, Pope,' Ruly argued to me, 'but the kid says he still can throw and wasn't treated right. Will you come with me back to the park?'

"I'll never forget that night," Owens continued. "I had hardly dried off. I got Dick Teed, a young manager, and we went to the park. We get the kid cranked up and he throws to Teed and Ruly's watching from behind home plate. Finally, Ruly says, 'Aw, you guys are right.'

"Now, the kid is so irate, he says he is going to burn down the hotel. Well, this hotel was so old and decrepit it would have gone up like a match box. Ruly was so worried he stayed up all night watching the place. The kid had blown his travel money—over a hundred dollars—on clothes, so the next morning we took him to the airport in a police car—in handcuffs."

Not-so-strangely, Owens looks back to that whacky night in Leesburg, Fla., as the precise time he realized there was something special about Robert Ruliph Morgan Carpenter III.

"His dedication and intensity were so great," said Owens, "that I was certain once he got experience, he would make a fine baseball executive. It was never said, but I figured Bob Carpenter sooner or later would turn the Phillies over to him and wanted him to gain experience in all areas."

That six-week stint at the Magnolia Hotel was also the birth of a relationship and a philosophy, the result of which you see on the field today.

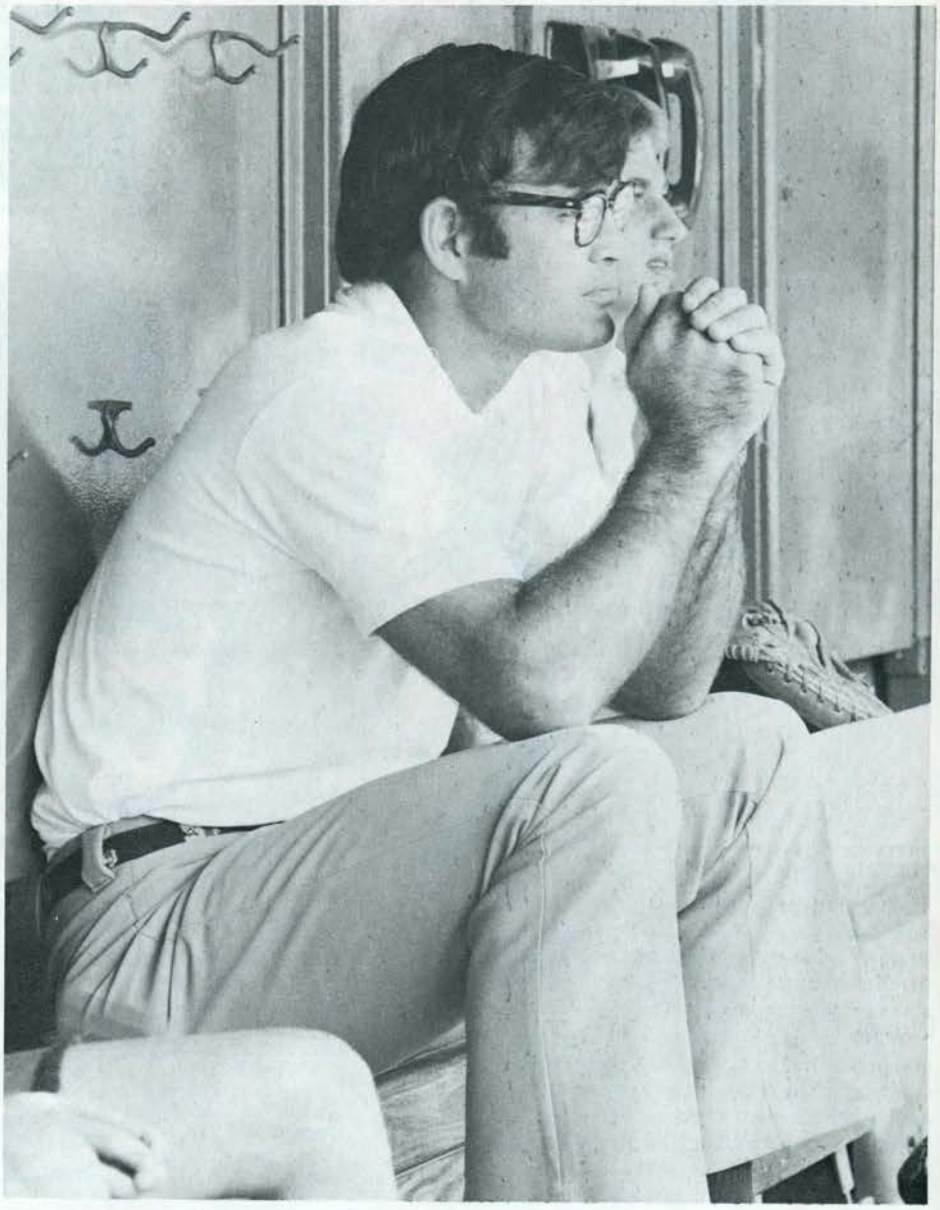
Owens was a fulltime Phillies' scout in California at the time, a grass roots baseball man. He had played and managed in the minors, had an uncanny ability to judge talent and would work anybody under the table to accomplish a goal.

Young Carpenter liked this. Even though Ruly never had to worry about a livelihood because of the family fortune, he too thrived on long hours and was so tired of hearing friends rip the Phillies, he figured sooner or later it would be his responsibility to turn the franchise around. That's why he gave up pre-law at Yale and decided to make baseball his career.

"Night after night we would talk baseball," Ruly remembers. "The Pope (Owens' nickname) felt everything revolved around scouting, player development and the minor leagues. It was obvious to me during those six weeks in Leesburg what our problem was.

"We just did not have enough athletes who could basically run and throw. There were a couple of kids—Barry Lerch was one of them—who looked like they had talent, but there just weren't enough. You should have at least 10 or 12 you really like. The Pope and I both agreed there was something grossly wrong with our scouting."

Even then, Ruly considered himself a good judge of talent. He had been an outstanding three-sport letterman at Tower Hill School in Wilmington, Del., continued his career at Yale and soon after graduation in 1962, became an assistant baseball coach at the University of Delaware where his father is a member of the board of trustees and chairman of that group's committee on athletics.



"Ruly Carpenter was the first one on the field in the afternoon and the last one off at night," remembers Tubby Raymond, who was baseball coach at the time. "He was so intense. He had a good baseball mind then, but was always asking questions about strategy and situations. The only thing bad was he lost a lot of our balls trying to see how far he could hit them with a fungo bat. No, it doesn't surprise me one bit he has done such a fine job with the Phillies."

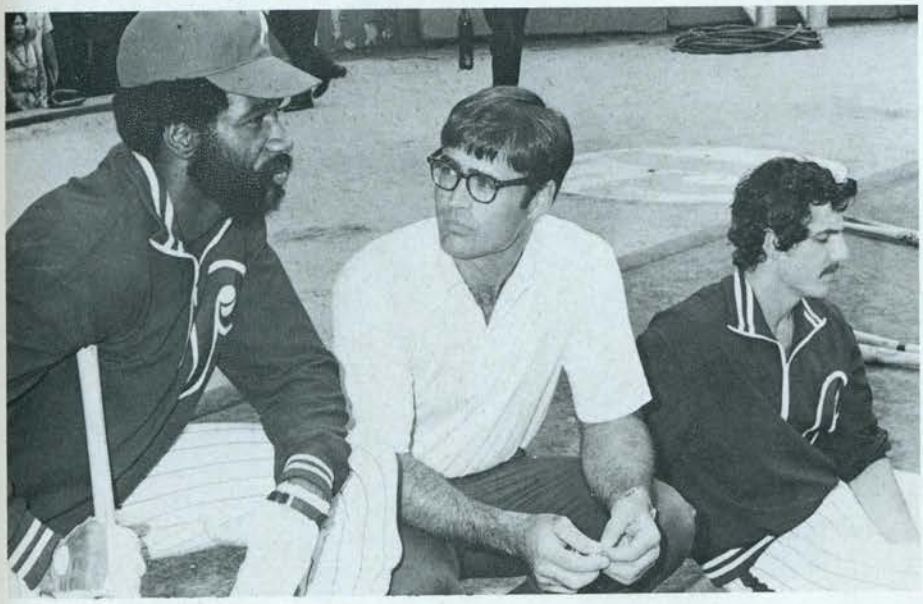
In May of 1965 Bob Carpenter fired Clay Dennis as farm director and based on Ruly's recommendation and urging, Paul Owens got the job.

"The only way I would take it was if I had complete control," said Owens. "Bob Carpenter was always dedicated to his people and a lot of them took advantage of him. When I cleaned house by replacing at least half of our scouts who were not producing, some of them felt all they had to do was go see Bob Carpenter and they would keep their jobs. They found out differently in a hurry."

Ruly quickly moved into the minor-league system under Owens and devoted most of his time in that area until his father stepped down on Nov. 21, 1972, making Ruly the youngest president in the majors.

"The day I arrived as farm director Bob Carpenter called me into his office," said Owens. "He told me he wanted Ruly to work under me and that I was to teach him everything—good, bad and indifferent. He said teach him like any other employe and it was a great five years.

It was also then that Owens heard from Bob Carpenter—in so many words—that eventually the team would be turned over to them.



"I told Ruly then it would take eight or nine years to build a champion," said Owens, who is a leading candidate for major league executive of the year. "It took a year and a half just to stop the retrogression."

For seven years Owens reshaped the minor league system, persuading Bob Carpenter to invest $250,000 for a complex in Clearwater, Fla., and getting him to spend another $30,000 to enter the Winter Instructional League.

In 1969 the Phillies were named the outstanding minor league operation in organized baseball.

"We had come from nothing," said Owens. "Until we won the division last year, that was the highlight of my career. I felt like we had really accomplished something."

On June 3, 1972, Paul Francis Owens was named vice president and player personnel director. A few months later, Ruly Carpenter became club president.

So, the Owens-Carpenter entry has been able to accomplish what it talked of and dreamed of those long nights in Leesburg, Fla., in 1964.

It would seem one of the toughest jobs Owens faced was taking a hard line with Bob Carpenter, who had taken over the Phillies on Nov. 23, 1943 after his father, the late Robert R. M. Carpenter Sr., had paid William Cox, a New York lumberman, an estimated $400,000 for what was described as a troubled franchise.

"I never was and never can be a 'yes' man," said Owens. "Bob Carpenter knew this. When I pushed for something, I told him if I failed, I could always go back to California and scout. I had to have his backing. That was the trouble with too many of the scouts. They were too worried about protecting their jobs and weren't producing."

When Paul and Ruly took over the farm system, Bob left his hands off for the most part, although his true love of baseball has always been in player development. Even today when he comes to Veterans Stadium, one of the first things he does is go over the minor-league report.

"It was not really that difficult to stand up to Daddy," said Ruly. "I think he realized what I had told him based on my six weeks in Leesburg and my work in the minor-league system. He more or less gave Paul and I the authority to go ahead and run the farm system. He was more than fair with us."

And Ruly insists there was no intent to show his father up.

"Ever since Herb Pennock (General manager at the time) died in my father's arms coming out of a New York hotel (Jan. 30, 1948), I think he was grasping for a good field man. My father and Pennock put the Phillies together, the ones who won the pennant in 1950, much like Paul and I have done now."

Ruly says he begged his dad not to retire in 1972 "because I knew we were on the way to something good and I wanted him to take part in it."

"Ruly was ready," Bob Carpenter remembers. "He knows all phases of the operation. I just felt the time had come for him to take over. He had worked hard and was ready."

The Ruly Carpenter-Paul Owens relationship, at times, is fairly fiery and on occasions Owens says he has to calm the sometimes-emotional Carpenter down.

"I tell him to count to 10," says Owens. "We fight like dogs sometimes about trades. He didn't like the Bake McBride deal when I proposed it to him. He and Dallas Green (now farm director) had signed Tommy Underwood. They hated to see him go. In the end, I said, 'The deal's being made. Period!' "

The players regard Ruly as a friend more than the owner.

"Guys who come here from other clubs cannot believe the closeness he has with us," said shortstop Larry Bowa. "Ruly Carpenter is a super person. His interest in the team comes all the way down to the clubhouse. I certainly hope when my playing days are over I will still be close to Ruly Carpenter. He helps us in so many ways you never hear about."

"It is important to us that we produce for him," said Greg Luzinski, "because he has so much faith in us. We do not want to let him down."

"In some ways, I've been a pigeon," says Ruly. "Especially in contract negotiations the past year or so. But these guys have gotten us where we are; I couldn't see losing them in the free-agent draft. That would have set us back."•

Exclusive Scouting Reports:

Each year 26 full-time Phillies scout and 70 part-time talent hunters spend hundreds of hours combing every baseball team in the country looking for another Greg Luzinski, Mike Schmidt or Larry Bowa.

This job is a lonely one, not glamorous by any means. But, it is oh so important to the success of a major league baseball team. It's been said many times, "Scouts are the backbone of a major league club."

A potential big league player is usually uncovered by a part-time scout or an area scout. After watching that particular player for years, the Phillies begin zeroing in on the best players in the country as each January and June draft approaches.

In an effort to get a better idea of the best players, cross-check scouting is conducted first by an area supervisor and then one or several of the following: Lou Kahn, Brandy Davis, Hugh Alexander, Fred Goodman and Dallas Green.

"This way we can compare a prospect with other players from around the country," explains Green, head of the Phillies minor league and scouting systems.

"The more opinions we receive on a player, the better chance we have of being able to select the top players in the country."

The nucleus of the current Phillies ball club came from the organization's development program. Players like Greg Luzinski, Bob Boone, Larry Christenson, Mike Schmidt, Larry Bowa, Warren Brusstar, Randy Lerch and Jim Wright are home-grown products.

Probably the most difficult part of scouting is to project what a skinny high school or growing college kid will be like as a major leaguer in 4-5 years.

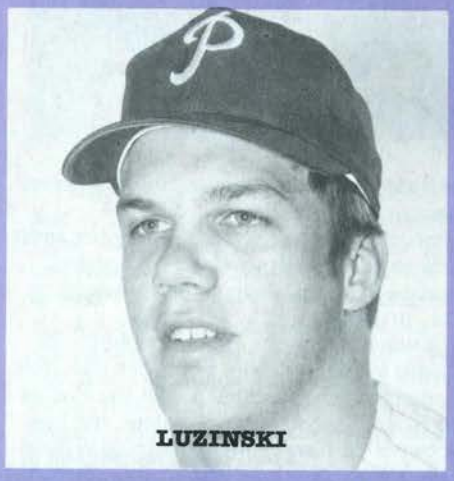
In checking old scouting reports on these eight players, the scouts seem to be hitting a whopping 1.000.

GREG LUZINSKI . . . Was a catcher-first baseman at Notre Dame High, Niles, Ill. Phillies drafted him first in June of 1968.

Frank Piet:
"Boy has a chance of making a good ball player. Big and strong with a lot of power. Makes good contact with fast bat. Hits ball to all fields. Basic fundamentals on hitting actions are great. Keeps the head and bat steady swinging from shoulder." 8/17/67

"This boy will be No. 1 in this area. A strong boy with good agility. Has potential to be a great hitter. Can hit to all fields with power. You can fool him with a pitch but throw it again and he will lose it out of the park. His body action and swing is level and strong. As a catcher he needs some work and coaching. Last summer the boy played first. I liked him at that position better. This boy can think with the pitcher and prove it with the bat." 4/6/68

A strong and aggressive hustling youngster who is gifted with a lot of ability. Big and strong with a lot of power in his bat. Short stride. Most of his fly balls to outfield are high and deep. Good wrist actions. Makes contact with bat regular. If boy would play in closed park, he would put on a show. Outfielders play him deep in open fields. Power is the boy's asset. Hustles on and off the field. Football player with over 40 scholarships." 5/6/68



LUZINSKI

BOB BOONE . . . Son of former major league infielder, Ray Boone. Played high school ball at Crawford High in San Diego. Went to Stanford where he was a pitcher-third baseman. Signed by the Phillies as latter by Eddie Bockman after being taken on the sixth round in 1969.

Merrill Combs:
"Ray Boone's boy. Not ready for pro ball now and is going to Stanford or USC. Worth following next year." 6/5/65

Eddie Bockman:
"Definite major league potential. Can make all the plays at 3rd. Good accurate arm. Has some power but mostly to off field. Knows how to play." 11/30/67

C. Smith:
"Has all the tools to be a major leaguer." 4/1/68

Eddie Bockman:
"Is pitching and playing 3rd. Confused and is pressing. High class boy. Like his make-up. He'll hit enough when he can stay at one position." 4/2/69

Art Lilly:
"This boy has a good arm and good power. Fields above average. Doesn't run well. Has improved very much with bat. Think he has chance to play major league ball. A prospect." 4/13/69

BOONE

Eddie Bockman:
"Only thing he can't do is run. Heads up kid with all the ability to play in the majors. Has to be my No. 1 man." 5/17/69

Glenn Elliott:
"Bat looks to be his best asset. Should be a good hitter with some power. Hits on a line. Will probably be a top draft." 5/20/69

LARRY CHRISTENSON . . . Tall pitcher at Marysville (Wash.) High where he was 26-7, striking out 143 in 72 innings. Phils No. 1 selection in 1972. Signed by Bill Harper.

George Grant:
"Best prospect in the state. Big hayseed with a good arm. Ball is straight but has good velocity." 7/22/71

CHRISTENSON

Bill Harper:
"Larry has a chance to be drafted high. He has a good arm and can throw hard. Throws with very little effort. He is a big and good athlete." 4/10/72

Brandy Davis:
"Towering, ideal build. Has strong body. This boy has a fine—possibly a great—arm. Velocity on fast ball is outstanding. Sinks when low, bores in when up. Has real pop with arm, wrist. Curve has rotation enough to give definite indication that this pitch will compliment his FB. Boy could well go in first three picks, first round." 5/9/72

Paul Owens:
"Boy showed A to A+ velocity on FB. Throws flat curve. Is big, strong and impressed me with his aggressiveness. I would like to have this raw-boned arm." 5/9/72

Dallas Green:
"Saw good body with good action. Smooth delivery and a boy you would like to have." 5/16/72

Lou Kahn:
"FB in first two innings was above average. His control on his FB was very good for high school boy. Good delivery and good loose arm. I think this boy is an outstanding prospect." 5/23/72

Bill Harper:
"Threw much better today than he did last time I saw him. FB was good, moved good with good velocity. Curve was good at times. Very impressive today." 5/23/72

LARRY BOWA . . . Three times he was cut by his high school coach. He stayed with it, played for American River Junior College, his American Legion team and in the Phillies Rookie League around the San Francisco bay area. Passed by everyone in the 1965 draft, Phillies signed him for $2,000 on recommendation of Eddie Bockman.

Eddie Bockman:
"The way he has played so far in the Peninsula League this fall someone will go for him. Has had a history of lousy attitude. Hasn't shown any of this in our 9 games so far. Has a major league shortstop arm, accurate. Has some power with the bat. Have always liked his potential but his attitude would make you throw up at times. Looks like he has grown up and wants to play. He can hit the fast ball and has some strength in the hands. Good on pop flies in back of him, will take charge of them. He keeps putting things together, someone will make a move on him. I'll say this, he is a definite major league prospect if he can keep the bugs out of his head. He will sign at a moment's notice." 10/2/65

BOWA

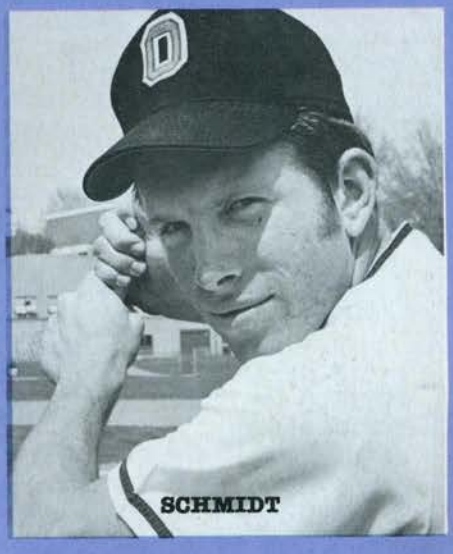
MIKE SCHMIDT . . . Went to Fairview High in Dayton but didn't start to attract a lot of attention until his baseball days at Ohio U., where he was a shortstop. Tried switch-hitting in college. Second round pick by Phillies in 1972 and signed by Tony Lucadello.

Ed French:
"Big, strong boy. Good hands and wrists. Strong arms. Hustles; good competitor. Challenges the pitchers. Has good power from both sides. Good bat control. Will follow." 8/10/68

Tony Lucadello:
"Swings a good bat with power. Can develop into a good power-hitter. Third base is his spot." 4/4/69

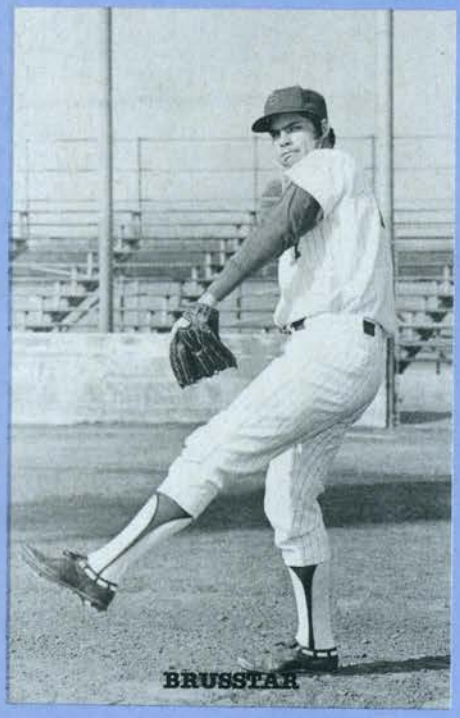
Ed French:
"Big boned, strong, hard-nosed kid. Real good power. Has poise and confidence. Good reflexes. Not quite quick enough for SS. Should be at 3rd or 1st." 4/22/70

Bill Schlesinger:
"Very aggressive. Ball jumps off his bat. Good power. Good actions, just average arm. 4.2 down the line. Good desire." 5/5/70



SCHMIDT

Tony Lucadello:
"This player has some pluses. Throws and fields well. Swings bat with power. Could be a good long ball hitter. Will be drafted high." 5/5/71
Paul Owens:
"Saw in 9-inning game. Has good coordination and body control for big man. Aggressive hitter (did not hit for me). Shows some power. If this boy cannot play SS (ML style), he could move to 3rd very easily. On a 1-game look, I can see him going in first two rounds." 5/8/71
Brandy Davis:
"This boy showed me he has fence power. Is a SS who can play SS. Except for running speed, he can do the other things and star in the big leagues. Dick Groat was slower, no where near the power." 5/22/71



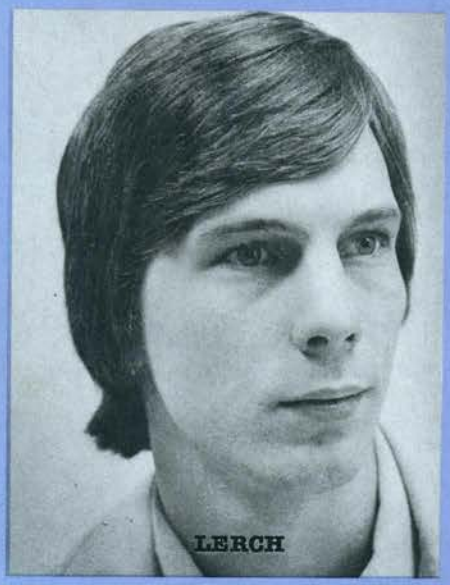
WARREN BRUSSTAR . . . Drafted by Mets and Giants but didn't sign. Went to Fresno State and was Phillies fourth selection in January, 1974. Eddie Bockman signed "Brew."

Eddie Bockman:
"Threw best since high school. Live FB, moved good. Over the top delivery. Will see again." 4/14/73
Wilbur Johnson:
"His strong asset is that he possesses the basic strength of arm. Over the top delivery. He labors sometimes but once in a while he lets a good FB loose with velocity." 8/12/73
Eddie Bockman:
"Has physical make up and arm to pitch in big leagues. Needs more knowledge of pitching. Strong kid and has stamina." 10/12/73

Eddie Bockman:
"Big, strong RHP who was previously drafted by Mets and S.F. Arm action and delivery are OK. Has basic control of his body and pitches. Breaking pitch needs more work but does show rotation to possibly develop a CB or slider. He impresses me as eventually becoming a relief pitcher in pro ball." 10/10/73
Eddie Bockman:
"Beat Stanford, 2-1, gave up 5 hits. Best pitch was FB, moving to hands of RH hitters. Lots of ground balls." 2/22/74

RANDY LERCH . . . Pitcher-outfielder at Rancho Cordova High School in California. Eighth round draft, 1973. Another Eddie Bockman signee.

Joe Borich:
"Good prospect. Fine arm and desire is good. Should go high next year. A fine hitter also." 7/4/72
Eddie Bockman:
"Good live arm. Ball moves all the time. Could get stronger and improve his velocity. A good follow for the next two years." 8/14/72
Bill Avila:
"FB has improved. This boy is just starting to fill out. In next couple of years could really come on. Best potential as a pitcher." 3/17/73
Eddie Bockman:
"FB is getting better each game. Slight build but will fill out in a couple years. If we can wait a couple of years for full maturity, we'll have a good pitcher." 3/28/73
Wilbur Johnson:
"Tall lanky LHP with the loose delivery. Shows good potential in arm, body and looseness of delivery to rate high. FB is of the sneaky variety and appears to gain velocity and get quicker the last 20 feet. Has good rotation on CB." 3/16/73



Eddie Bockman:
"Looked really good in two tournament games. 2 shutouts, striking out 26 in 13 innings. No signs of arm problems. FB alive. Threw several ML curve balls. Have to move up high." 5/25/73

JIM WRIGHT . . . Big (6-foot-6) righthander out of Benton High School in St. Joseph, Mo. Fifth round draft in 1973. Signed by George Bradley.

George Bradley:
"Big athlete's body. Not yet as strong as he is going to be. Very big hands and gunboats for feet. Good, long, loose arm. Doesn't overpower you but might some day. Every ball he threw moved. Curve started very poorly but got better as game went on. Motion and form need work. Rhythm is poor. Hip and shoulder come out together. With good pitching coach and time, future could be bright." 5/3/73
Hugh Alexander:
"Fast growth, 2 1/2" in height and 30 lbs. in weight in 1 year. Coordination is still not real good but shows a pretty good delivery. With proper coaching could make an outstanding pitcher. FB is alive and at times showed good velocity. However, the most important thing was the movement on the FB." 5/14/73

Lou Fitzgerald:
"Big, strong. Needs a lot of work but has good arm action and should get faster. I think this boy would be a good "A" level draft and will be a good pitcher in a few years." 5/14/73
George Bradley:
"Just a big, strong, crude pitcher who doesn't overpower you now but might some day. Doesn't throw hard enough yet but will be stronger and with just a little help, could have a great FB. Same goes for CB. Will not look good for a year or two but then should come quickly." 5/14/73

Phillies and the Community

The professional athlete of the 70's has been portrayed as a greedy, self-centered individual who is oblivious to anything outside his own world.

This stereotype certainly does not apply to many of Philadelphia Phillies who spent some long hours this past winter helping charitable causes.

Garry Maddox, Larry Bowa and Mike Schmidt helped raise over $60,000.00 for the Philadelphia Child Guidance Center.

Tug McGraw, Steve Carlton, Larry Christenson and Jerry Martin rode bicycles all the way from Philadelphia to Florida to publicize the 1978 Muscular Dystrophy drive. Along the way, they received donations in excess of $30,000.

Greg Luzinski spent $21,000.00 to buy tickets for underprivileged children. Named "The Bull Ring," Luzinski has repurchased the tickets again for 1978.

Also active in charity work were the Phillies Wives who raised over $21,000 last year for the Delaware Foundation for Retarded Children.

Phillies players to a man feel that they have been treated very well in the Philadelphia area and want to give something back to the community that they have grown to love. They are doing just that!

Bob Boone (left) and ex-Phil John Vukovich visit with patients this winter at the Veterans Administration Hospital as part of the No Greater Love Program's national salute commemorating the fifth anniversary of the P.O.W.'s return.

The first memorial plaque which was presented by No Greater Love in honor of U.S. servicemen who lost their lives in Vietnam was placed in the Trophy Room of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington National Cemetery on October 26, 1977. Pictured are: NGL President Hank Aaron with Mike Schmidt and Garry Maddox observe the plaque with children of MIA's and KIA's.

Players Maddox, Schmidt and Bowa spend time signing autographs at the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic.

Refunds will be made on tickets only if the tickets are returned at least 14 days prior to the game.
